NOW THEY HATCH COLORED CHICKS, FEATHERS WILL FADE

Some two dozen chickens hatched at Vineland, N. J. are right in he spirit of the Easter season.

Instead of the usual pale yellow or black, their downy loats are red, green and deep vellow.

It's the result of experiments made by Mrs. Aya Mary Kiss, of Cleveland, Ohio, who inoculated 50 eggs with government-approved dyes. About 27 of them produced chicks with other than the normal colors.

The chicks were hatched at the Wene chick farm here. Mrs. Kiss explained their coats gradually fade into normal color as they mature and lose their original feathers.
