

OWL LAFFS

—BY— A WISE OWL

I'm really getting worried when I look at the calendar and see that March is half over. The next thing you know we'll be raking up leaves. Oh, I know they're not even out now, but with the way the time flies, they'll be out and fallen in no time. Then we'll start to worry about next Christmas. Boy! Am I getting old!

The poor wives in this community are accused of many things by the dopes they marry—to hide their own shortcomings. One day, one husband at the barber shop, said to another: "You know, for six months now I've been wondering where my wife spends her evenings. Last night I went home and there she was.... Amazing isn't it?"

You know, humor is a saving grace. When we realize it even pops up in cemeteries, it makes it easier for all concerned and helps to soften the "sting of death". Walking around the Mount Joy Cemetery on Sunday I noticed a fellow we all know, leaning over a grave and crying as if his heart would break. "Oh, why did you die?" Over and over again for about ten minutes, he cried: "Oh why did you die?" Finally I walked over and patted him on the shoulder and said: "Look, your grief is very profound and I hate to interrupt you, but I'm curious. Would you mind telling me who is buried there?" And he replied: "My wife's first husband. Oh, why did you die?"

On a recent trip to Florida we witnessed a little happening that has quite a moral to it. We pass it on to you.

A robin was very hungry. He circled an open air market and finally spotting a meat stand, dove down and speared some bologna, which he ate. Then he zoomed right up onto the branch of a tree and started to whistle and sing to the full extent of his lungs, you could hear him for blocks around. A man with a gun heard him, took aim and shot the little bird. The moral of the story is—WHEN YOU'RE FULL OF BALONEY, KEEP YOUR MOUTH SHUT.

Today's medical tip: To avoid nose-bleed keep your nose out of other people's business.

Our office devil wants to know why someone doesn't invent a dictionary in which we can look up words we don't know how to spell.

The boys at the Lincoln were discussing the fairer sex when I remarked: "I'd like to meet a girl who doesn't flirt, giggle, gossip, smoke, drink, pet, kiss, wink, use make-up, run around or dissipate in any way." And one of his listeners asked: "Why?"

If a man is unhappy at home he should find out if his wife has married a grouch.

A local guy had been out pouring himself a terrific load one night and finally staggered home. When he got there, he took out his key and tried to get it in the lock. He tried and tried and he fumbled and fumbled, but he just couldn't find the keyhole. Finally he woke up his wife who stuck her head out the upstairs window and said: "Is that you, John?" He said "Yeah it's me." "What is all the racket for?" "I can't open the door." "Well, do you want me to throw you down a key?" "No, but you can throw me down a keyhole!"

A veteran told me that the less said about some of these veteran's housing projects the better. As a matter of fact, at a place on Long Island recently they were building five thousand houses to sell for five thousand dollars a-piece. But they had to quit. They ran out of Scotch tape.

THE LOW DOWN

HICKORY GROVE

You know, in these days when so many windy gents are telling us of their devious but urgent way of making our simple democracy complicated, I see an omen in the cfling—a good omen. A good eyesight you have, says Henry. Do not slow me down, I says. I see writers—ones who have been in the Fair or New Deal corner for years—beginning to show doubt. Some are wondering if we really can, after all, make everybody, bdonze, black or white, prosperous and happy via a motherly, coddling Govt. versus making prosperity and long time happiness depend upon a person's degree of desire to perspire.

This means to me, Henry, old boy I says, that our present over-size Ship-of-State may be weakening at some of the seams—as some of the regular passengers are deserting and going ashore. And in quite hefty political circle things are happening too. Uncle Jimmy Byrnes is already on dry land—writers are putting 2 and 2 together. Jimmy, of all people, should know if the old boat is seaworthy or has become barnacle coated. That old Carolinian is no green pea.

And new Congress, sucking its thumb and making half-hearted motions at getting Sambo weaned from his prodigal living, may be on the verge of getting hep. Looks half-way promising anyway -- all most.

Yours With The Low Down
JIMMY
