OWL LAFFS

—BY—
A WISE OWL

They say the exclamation point is being absolutely discarded because people aren't surprised at anything these days.

A coed has now been defined as something which puts the enjoyment in college, but takes the education out.

We must be extremely careful how we express ourselves to the very young generation, for they are liable to misunderstand and be made unhappy as was the case of a little fellow who came home from school (he's a first grader) in tears. When his mother asked what the trouble was, he explained: "Well, teacher told me 'to sit on a chair for the present' — and she never gave it to me."

Get this—
Found a little rabbit, called him "Jim"—got sixteen now—warn't no him!

A rookie cop was being bawled out for letting a crook get away. "Didn't you guard the exits?" the sergeant roared. "Yes, sir," answered the rookie. "He must have gone out one of the entrances." — That's a double cross.

Was invited to a Maytown home last night and at 7:45 the eight year old boy of the family was contentedly watching television when his mother came in to tell him it was his bedtime. She was startled to see the mantel clock said 11:45. "What in the world happened to that clock?" she asked. The boy grinned sheepishly and said: "I changed it. I wanted to find out what it felt like to stay up until midnight."
