EDITORIAL

The atom is like a hair in your mouth or a cracker crumb in the bed—you can't see them but you know they are there.

If you will remember the Government bought eggs in large quantities several years ago, in order to keep the price up, then dried and stored them. Now the Army refuses to buy them and is getting its supply elsewhere because the CCC's hens' fruit don't meet the requirements.

It's quite natural that when eggs lay around too long they get loud.

SEEING IN THE DARK

Three on a match is supposed to be unlucky. The superstition came into being during World War I when three cigarettes on one match meant a flame burning too long for safety since the enemy could train their rifles for an accurate aim. However, if the infra-red rays are used in the sniperscope, which is supposed to be infantry equipment, the rifleman can see in total darkness. So it won't matter much how many lights for fags are on one match. But this is so often what happens to our old superstitions and customs when modern sciences steps in and takes over.

WITH US ALWAYS

Under Hitler, religion in Germany suffered repression but today Germans in the Western zone are crowding their war-bombed, torn and ruined buildings to worship their God. Both Protestant and Catholic churches, with little income and heavy debts, plan new building programs to care for increased membership. In Communist East Germany religious practices are limited. The Russian government has frozen church funds, banned the distribution of religious literature and forbidden higher theological study. This is not the first time, nor will it be the last, that people have been forbidden to outwardly pursue and observe their faith. But no matter how powerful the State, man's God they can never take from him.

THE LOST ART OF CORRESPONDENCE

The quill pen in the container of popples, the rosewood desk, sand dusted ever damp ink, wax and signet for the seal, and the ritual of letter writing began. Time has changed all that and correspondence is no longer an art nor, in many cases, is it a habit. The telephone answers many a letter. Telegraph simplifies messages. It used to be that the writing equipment was a stage set for a certain day or days each week, with pleasure and determination. Today the typewriter is opened, the ball-point pen goes away with the ink pot. Instead of using either to send a sentimental word for a birthday, graduation, illness, death, you hie yourself to the card mart and buy a colorful, printed greeting. All of us practice this easy way. In a way, it is too bad, isn't it?

IN UNION IS STRENGTH

Upon the shoulders of the 82nd Congress rests the future welfare of this country, probably of western civilization. Too often we feel, that once we have elected to membership, Congress is then on its own. Congress should represent us at all times, should participate in circumstances as we the people, desire. But we, the people, must know what we want, must be unified in our desires. If we can forget, at least put aside, during this emergency our political party hates, our bickering for Republican or Democratic gains, we would find ourselves and our voice stronger to challenge domestic and foreign issues. Congress is the instrument that tells the world of what we so proudly hail as democracy. Only with a unified people back of it can Congress reach an objective. When a country is confused and dismayed, its direction can't be surely chartered. A national state of indecision can change democracy to chaos.

To keep a people from confusion, it is the obligation of our administration to inform us of its policy, of the how and why, candidly and truthfully, free from political intrigue and party innuendoes. Debate is necessary and expected as it is functional in the running of a democratic government, but a responsible, unified program promoted by earnest, sincere, purposeful leaders, will win the debate, will restore confidence in all of us. Then can we press forward in united ranks to meet the demands of limitations and restrictions. The state of the union depends on the degree of unity in the states.

NEXT COMING UP

Price control, unless covering a broad area, inflicts injustice. To limit automobile prices makes it necessary to limit prices of copper, steel, glass, rubber and such that will make the auto.

Wage control can work only if living costs are held in check and this is done, in an emergency, by price control of consumer goods. Scarce items are usually the first hit. However, in fixing prices on basic needs, the result is apt to be regional shortages, an adequate supply there, an extreme and serious shortage here. So comes rationing to allocate supplies. Under this system meat seems to be the first affected. The reason is that the national supply isn't as large as many less perishable products nor can the supply be increased as quickly as many other foods. It has been tried, with the result of reckless slaughtering that leads to greater shortages a year or two later, of severe grain shortages. Meat is classed as a luxury food. Three-fourths of the people of the world do not consider it a necessary item of food. They know that the same area of ground will produce more human nourishment in broad grains than by using this ground for grass or grain for meat animals. So although rationing is never a pleasant thing to us, we would rather have meat apportioned as fairly as possible and have rationing to get it than to not have rationing and not have enough meat.
