

OWL LAFFS

—BY—
A WISE OWL

Seems as though the gol-darnest things are happening down around Landisville of late.

About a month or more ago Paul Risser, who owns one of those snows homes along the highway below the camp meeting grounds, built a new concrete garage, but due to the scarcity of carpenters, he has been unable to have a roof put on it—not even a rafter. Only the blocks are laid.

Recently his good wife purchased a beautiful lawn table. One day last week it looked like rain so she hurriedly carried the table into the garage so it wouldn't get wet. Well, it rained and can you imagine her surprise after the table got a good ducking in that roofless garage.

But you needn't laugh. How many of you readers, at some time or other, didn't do something just as thoughtless as that. Emy how, as the Dutchman said: 'Ve all got a good laff.'

You should have seen me laff. Jimmy Christmas. I laff so much my suckspenders busted all the buttons off my pants un I kouldent go into de house till somebody bought me a couple safety pins.

Our apprentice Carl Brandt, with a crowd of Isaac Waltons, were fishing down at Bowers Beach over the week-end. Carl promised me a mess of fish but I heard so many of those stories in my time that I didn't put too much confidence in his promise, even though he is a good fisherman.

Well, when they got home Carl said: "They weren't bitin'." Better luck next time fellows.

Aren't people a peculiar lot? They do the same crazy things over and over again. They pack up the kids and lunch and blankets and clothes for a Sunday outing in sweltering heat, keep hollering at the youngsters to be careful of a bumble bees nest and poison ivy, bandage cuts and bruises and have strangers looking down the back of your neck and come home full of bites and perfectly miserable yet come next Sunday, they'll do it all over again.

Or else they'll get a terrific dose of sunburn (just like last year when they were so sick and in pain) and then moan for a week about it.

There's sabotage going on in this column! Things get in here I don't know about but get the blame. But they're having an awful lot of fun.

As the parking meter said to the car: "If you've got the money, I've got the time."

The phone rings at three a. m.: "Stop worrying about me, Mom, I'm in jail." - - - He's safe enough

In a Freshman final: "Name the outstanding accomplishment of the Romans." Student: "They understood Latin." - - - We sympathize.

We couldn't get it either without the help of a "ponie". It sure would simplify things if they'd put the words in the correct rotation, as we do in English. But, oh no. They have to make it confusing. It's not bad enough, you have to remember the translation and the conjugation you gotta hunt through all the words and find the verb sticking back near the end of the sentence, the subject somewhere around the middle with fifteen other words all around to confuse you. So, if you muster it, it really is an accomplishment. The worst part of the whole set up is, after you get it, it's a dead language, so what have you?

Over a coke at Sloan's the crowd was discussing their preferred vacations. When the subject of mountain climbing and exploring caves came up, one of the boys asked:

It is estimated that nearly 250,000 people are employed in Pennsylvania in producing, processing and delivering milk.

"What would you say were exploring is?" And his friend replied: "That would be mountain climbing in reverse."

That's as good a definition as the one I heard of a "Parisian sidewalk restaurant. They called it a macadamized roach ranch. They have a hybrid species of bees that carry mustard from spot to spot.

THE LOW DOWN News From Florin

HICKORY GROVE

I been readin' where some gents choose to change our calendar — make it over complete — make all holidays come on same day of the week, and what have you. I say it would be simpler to just make 'em all holidays. Sisters and brothers, there is some uplifting and welfare that really is welfare and uplift. If I was just a little winder than I am already windy, L kinda think and recon I could take to the hungry lunch circuit or hop in the radio and get quite a following for my plan—"every day a holiday." I might put the Utopia Party on page 2 versus 19 years hovering around the front page, with none of the old problems yet solved but with new and heretofore undreamed of problems looming—some synthetic and without substance but sounding as if in dire need of fixing.

And whilst on "all holidays" versus little or no work, I will now come down to earth—I cannot close this epistle without a mention of the right to work, as no other right can surpass same.

The right to work for how much, where—when—and how long or for who, is not 100 percent your right today in 1951, in this U. S. A. The legalized closed shop—legalized violence—curb your freedom and your off-shoot's freedom and future. To date 17 states have done something about a start to protect the worker—31 other states need get off the dime.

Yours with the low down,
JIMMY

MAGAZINE FINDS 'TYPICAL' AMERICAN THINKS HE IS NOT 'TYPICAL' AT ALL

Do you have 1.6 children or own 3 of an automobile? Probably not many can qualify as to the foregoing. But anyway, that's the status in which the typical American family finds itself.

And, according to the current issue of the American Magazine, most "typical" Americans don't consider themselves as such. That's why the magazine sent Roul Tunley, one of its top writers, to Terre Haute, Ind., city nearest the center of population, recently to find the typical American family.

Bob Simmons, 34, production planner for the Quaker Maid Company, subsidiary of the Great Atlantic & Pacific Tea Co., his attractive wife, Margaret, and their two sons, Steve and Phillip, were selected as the most typical of American families.

"Mine is not the typical American family," says Simmons' first reaction to having the label pinned on him. "That was what Tunley was looking for, because, he says: 'The most typical thing about an American is that he doesn't consider himself "typical" anything.'"

Simmons' job pays him $4,000 a year and he is charged with planning the amount of spaghetti, or mayonnaise, or peanut butter, that will be produced in the A&P factory the next day or the next week. He lives in a $10,500, yellow brick, two-story home which was purchased a year ago with the help of a GI loan. The payments are $85 a month.

CLIP THE PASTURE

Next to lime and fertilizer, the most important means of improving permanent pasture is timely mowing, reminds A. E. Cooper, Penn State extension agronomist. The clippings cut off tall uncut grass and weeds, thus giving new growth a better chance.
