Stile Still in Style

STILES may be old-fashioned, but as long as there are barbed wire fences there will be stiles. Spotted at strategic locations, stiles will save clothing, tempters and walking to a gate. Besides, the fence will last longer.

The stile shown in the illustration is simple to build and easy to climb. Uprights, made of 1 by 3-inch lumber, should extend 18 inches above the top wire so they may be used as supports when climbing over. Each of the cross-pieces is 35 inches long cut from lumber of the same dimensions and nailed to the fence post directly above each strand of wire. The braces underneath are nailed to the post and the uprights.

To protect the wood paint the stile. It will last much longer and be safer.

Farmers Can Get

County will be necessary this summer to get in the crops.

"The State Employment Service can help provide workers in most instances," said Rochow, "but rough estimates of labor needs now is essential to make sure farmers get workers when they need them. Things to consider, for instance, are whether boys and girls, men and women, men only or boys only can do an adequate job and what transportation arrangement can be worked out. Can day labor do the job? Or will housing on the farm be necessary? Local workers who can travel easily back and forth are of course much cheaper than foreign migrant laborers."

Rochow has his office in Lancaster at 228 East Orange Street, Lancaster, telephone number 7193, but he can be reached by interested farmers through almost any postmaster, general store keeper or farm association.

Scrap From Farms Will Help In Production of Defense Equipment

WANTED: All the iron and steel scrap that is lying dormant on farms, such as obsolete, broken and worn out equipment and other accumulated material. It is urgently needed to maintain and increase the output of steel plants and foundries. More scrap means more steel!

If steel mills and foundries are to achieve any increase in production over the present high level, all available farm scrap must be started moving off the farms, says the Committee on Iron and Steel Scrap, of American Iron and Steel Institute.

Farmers everywhere can help toward more steel by scrapping their obsolete equipment and selling it promptly to a local scrap dealer, with other iron and steel scrap from their farms. It will be used to make steel for defense equipment and essential civilian items.

The need is urgent. Steel plants and foundries are now using record quantities of scrap. Every day in 1951 about 98,000 tons of purchased scrap are being used. Never before have such large quantities been required. Even so the need will increase, for steel capacity is scheduled to rise sharply over the next year or two.

Farms have always been a good source of scrap and during the war when drives were conducted, agricultural areas yielded large tonnages of scrap to help win the conflict.

Farmers are asked to take their scrap now to town and sell it to scrap dealers. If the scrap is unusually bulky, preventing its easy transportation by the farmer, the scrap dealer can be called or arrangements can be made through the local farm agent to get it to the dealer.

Farms are one of the principal sources of the scrap that is required by steel companies and foundries. Auto wrecking yards, factories and railroads are among the other major sources.

More scrap from farms means more steel!

Farmers Can Save Lives and Property With Proper Lightning Rod Protection

Indianapolis—Inadequate lightning rod protection may kill 400 farmers this summer and cause property damage in the millions of dollars, according to Harry P. Cooper, Jr., secretary of the National Association of Mutual Insurance Companies.

The Association represents 1,200 farm mutual insurance companies located in all sections of the nation.

"Most of the losses in lives and property because of lightning are unnecessary," Cooper said. "Experience has proved that proper lightning rod protection will protect farm buildings against lightning."

Cooper explained that lightning rods carry off the stroke when it hits a building and also prevent strokes from occurring. The rods, he said, are continually draining off accumulated electrical charges, thus reducing the possibilities of a flash.

The above illustration, prepared by the Association, shows the proper installation of lightning rods.

A—Lightning conductor is coiled around the ventilators and a point is provided for each ventilator.

B—"V" or "U" pockets must be avoided by additional down conductor paths where it is impossible to course the conductor in a level path.

C—A separate point is installed on silo, with its conductor connected to the main down conductor. (Silo within 4 feet of the barn require a second ground when the length of conductor from silo point to connection with barn down conductor exceeds 16 feet.)

D—Hay-track, barn door track, litter carrier track, eave-troughs and water system are interconnected to the conductor to drain the accumulation of charge on the bodies to prevent side flash.

E—Stanchions or other metal bodies within 6 feet of the down conductor are interconnected to prevent side flash.

F—Wire fences are interconnected to the protection system.

G—Protection from mechanical injury is advisable for the conductor from ground level upward for 6 to 8 feet. (It is preferable to use wood or non-magnetic materials. A wooden fence post, sawed in half with the flat side placed next to the conductor will serve, adequately.)

H—Effectiveness of a system depends on the ground conductors being in moist earth with low electrical resistance. (The grounding rod should be driven to a depth of 10 feet at a distance of 2 feet from the structure. Grounding methods will vary with soil conditions.)

I—Down conductors are as widely separated as possible—opposite corners of the building preferred.
