But Not Missouri Rabbit

Rabbits and mules have two things in common-both have long ears and when you think of either, you think of Missouri.

But, while the Missouri mule has given way to changing times, the rabbits carry on, undaunted by the growing army of those who want him. During the 1949-50 season, an estimated 2,664,400 Missouri bunnies fell to the hunter's gun. More than 438,760 were shipped out in the rabbit-meat trade and buyers from 30 other states purchased 305,-500 alive for restocking purposes. This brought the total bag for the year to more than three and a half million rabbits, which is about an average harvest. In view of this seemingly large harvest, the Missouri conservation commission is sometimes accused of sacrificing the state's rabbit population to the demands of both commerce and sport. But a look at the habits of the rabbit and other factors affecting cottontail posterity, reveals no such picture.

Commission Biologist Kenneth C. Rowe, who conducts state-wide studies on rabbits, says that the average mother cottontail produces 17 young during a single season. Bennitt and during a single season. Bennitt and Nagel in their 1937 report of Missouri's first comprehensive game driven into place readily by striking the survey, placed the state's average rod with a hammer. - Illus., courtesy fall population of rabbits at over American Builder. 10 million. Even if only a few million are still hanging around by spring, their progeny will run into plenty of rabbits.

A rabbit's greatest enemy, Rowe says, is not the gun, dog or trap. Of all bunnies born each spring and summer, only about 20 per cent survive for hunting in November. This high mortality is due largely to removal of protective and nesting cover, natural predation, freezing and drowning of young during unfavorable weather, overgrazing by stock and burning off cover, and disease. Actually, the controlled human harvest helps to keep this species within the carrying capacity of its surroundings.

Brucellosis Drive Aimed At Eradication, Not Cure

Farmers would fight a losing battle against brucellosis if they had to depend on drugs to cure it. That is why the campaign against blood-testing elimination of discination of calves, according to a special committee of the American veterinary medical association.

The committee, headed by Dr. A. M. Orum of Carthage, Ill., was formed to aid the nation's current drive against bovine brucellosis. CHARGE IS DROPPED The disease, believed to be costing WHEN MAN PAYS ALIMONY

Hard Job Made Easy

DRIVING a nail into a hard-to-reach place is made simple by the use of the device illustrated. Simply use a short piece of metal tubing that is wide enough to accommodate the head of the nail to be driven.

Now take an iron rod which fits loose ly in the tube. This rod should be square at both ends.

The de sign is made in a wax pattern, then plaster mold is made around it. To remove the pattern, the wax is melted, and thus "lost". Then molten metal is poured into the mold, to take the place of the wax, and after it hardens the plaster is chipped away. This process was developed to a high degree of precision during World War II for making parts for machinery.
