REDDY... the farmer's always-on-hand man!

ELECTRICITY IN FARMING DOESN'T COST—IT PAYS!

Farming will never be classified as one of the "soft" occupations. But Reddy Kilowatt is mighty proud of his part in greatly lessening the burden of the farmer and his family here in Central Eastern Pennsylvania.
In the short space of 25 years, Pennsylvania Power & Light Company's rural electrification program has made Reddy's service available to all but a remote few of the area's farmers. And experience has shown that once Reddy goes to work it is not long before he becomes right hand man to the whole farm family, always on hand at the flick of a switch. From curing hay to heating water, from washing clothes to warming the toaster...Reddy Kilowatt daily proves himself to be the farm's most versatile, tireless and cheapest hired hand.

Significantly, today America speaks of raising crops, stock and poultry as the farming "industry". This has come about because the modern farmer operates his farm like any other business...using up-to-date time and labor-saving electrical methods to earn maximum profit for his efforts. The progressive farmer today harnesses electricity to step up production, improve the quality of his farm's yield, eliminate costly old-fashioned methods and increase farm safety. Thus electricity opens the door to the same low-cost, high-efficiency methods that have brought success to all other American industries.

RURAL ELECTRIFICATION WEEK
AUGUST 26 to SEPTEMBER 1
In this week, the business-managed, tax-paying electric companies will join in giving recognition to the almost universal application of electricity to better farming.
