"This planned range lighting protects our poultry flock"

So states poultryman John M. Deiter of Fountain, Hegins, R.D. #1. "By following the planned lighting recommendations of our PP&L Farm Representative, we've escaped those nightly poultry losses to foxes and other wild animals. The battery of flood lamps not only scares off these killers but makes all the range shelters clearly visible from the house."

Mr. Deiter's flock of high-grade pullets normally numbers about 5000. But his protective lighting consists only of an inexpensive battery of three projector type weather-proof lamps on a crossarm plus three more mounted on the roof of the laying house. Combined these two batteries of lights completely illuminate the whole Deiter poultry range. Besides this protection for his flock, poultryman Deiter says, "the safety and convenience of a properly lighted farm are added dividends of my planned farm lighting." Two other projector flood lamps provide outdoor lighting on other farmstead areas for Mr. Deiter.
