First Walkout Traced To Ancient Egyptians

Strikes and "walkouts" may be news today, but they were an old story to a man named Zenon who lived in Egypt more than 2,000 years ago.

As manager of a great estate for Apollonius, right-hand of King Ptolemy Philadelphus, Zenon was constantly besieged by the discontented peasants who tilled the land. Conflicts, strikes, and complaints were his daily lot. Whenever he would not yield to their terms for better working conditions, the peasants would walk out on him in a body.

Headquarters for these first recorded strikes of labor, was usually a temple where the workmen would seek refuge until their demands were met. Between strikes and walkouts, they would compose letters to Apollonius, complaining of Zenon's "inefficiency and lack of intelligence in managing the agricultural work" on the 6,800 acre estate. Some of them even asked for an audience with Apollonius so that they might air their grievances at greater length and in more considerable detail.

On one side of Zenon were Apollonius, to whom the peasants were forced to pay rent, and the officials, who came to weigh the grain as soon as it was ripe, so that they could confiscate the state's share. On the other side, were the unhappy peasants who felt they were being dealt with unjustly.

If ever a man needed a labor relations expert, it was Zenon. Unfortunately, at the time, there was no one qualified to fill that need. And although he eventually graduated to the role of vineyard owner, cattle-breeder, and sheep-raiser, Zenon died without ever learning the art of getting along with his workers.

American Laugh Hurt Bowler More Than Sticks or Stones

One hundred years ago a revolution occurred—and the world of hats has never been quite the same since.

The top hat—whose admirers claimed it was "like Shakespeare, to be not for an age, but for all time"—was knocked off its reigning perch by an innocuous but saucy little item called "the bowler." In the autumn of 1920 the bowler was honored in Great Britain by one of the first centenary celebrations ever held for a hat.

Unlike its high-hat predecessor, the bowler—or derby, as it is known in America—was both democratic and efficient. It was adopted by men in all walks of life and prized for its neat resistance to high winds, falling plaster and snowballs hurled by small boys.

Despite its utilitarian features, however, the low-crowned, hard-shelled bowler had its day in the courts of high style. Britain's Prince Albert adopted it within a year after William Coke—staunch advocate of common sense headgear for the stepperechase—designed it as a kind of crash-helmet protection in equestrian accidents.

By the '80's men of fashion on two continents were not fully dressed without a bowler. It was the choice of every blade of the "Gay Nineties." In the 1920's it was the trademark of New York's fun-loving mayor Jimmy Walker. The brown derby affected by Governor Al Smith became something of a political symbol. A Hollywood restaurant was built in its image and named for it.

Today the bowler is still a popular part of the British wardrobe. In London it stamps the bank clerks, young men-about-town and, especially, gas-meter readers. In the United States, however, the derby is seen less and less frequently. It seems to have been relegated largely to the world of the theater—as part of variety acts, a thing of humor.

Lightning Reading Machine

A proposed reading machine which could search the entire library of congress in ten seconds, select all the information on a given subject, and print selected abstracts at the rate of ten a minute, was described to the American chemical society division of chemical literature in Chicago recently. Five thousand times faster than an existing device called the Rapid Selector, which is said to have searched 50,000 references in five minutes, the proposed machine might become the nucleus of a jointly-supported documentary project, financed on a subscription basis. The machine would make it possible to furnish bibliographic searches in response to any request by return air mail, giving an overnight service to information users.

THIS YEAR'S TOBACCO CROP BELOW LAST YEAR'S OUTPUT

Pennsylvania tobacco farmers have about finished cutting their 1951 crop and soon will have nearly 59,000,000 pounds curing in their tobacco sheds.

Production this year is about 2-3 percent less than last, but nearly 6,000,000 above the 1949-49 average, according to Federal-State surveys.

Government Removes Eggs From Price Support List

Many agricultural workers throughout the midwest are anxiously awaiting the outcome of the removal of eggs from the list of government price supported agricultural commodities, scheduled for January 1.

Many poultrymen believe it is probable that egg prices will fluctuate considerably when supports are removed, but will steady in a short time.

BULLETIN IS A PART OF GREAT INDUSTRY

Any one having the idea that the newspaper business is peanuts, please digest the following: Of 319 classifications in the Commonwealth, the newspaper industry ranks sixth in number of employees, fifth in payroll and third in value of products. It is a $146,000,000 business.

Breaking these figures down there are 129 daily papers in Pennsylvania, 15 Sunday papers and 325 weekly newspapers. These weeklies publish one million copies per week.

In the consumption of Newsprint, New York state leads the nation with Pennsylvania second.

MARIETTA DEPOT WILL ACQUIRE 110 ACRES OF LAND

The Marietta Army Transportation Corps depot will acquire 110 more acres of land in its $3,010,200 expansion program which has cleared another Congressional hurdle.

That means a more than 25 per cent expansion in depot land area. The depot now covers 414 acres.

While depot officials had no official detail from Washington yet, it was pointed out that the land purchase would apparently involve surrounding farmland in E. Donnegal Twp.

Nancy Witmer, 2-yr-old daughter of Mr. and Mrs. Roy E. Witmer, Hellam Rl, was killed Saturday when run over by a truck operated by her uncle.
