SHORT STORY

The Long Way Home

By Beatrice Cargill

3-Minute Fiction

LONG AFTER the 12:07 had moved out of sight around Black Mountain, two figures stood motionless on the tiny platform. Above them, creaking on its hinges, the sign read "Turner Junction." Wind whirled and eddied around them harshly. Job Reynolds, station master, stayed discreetly inside the ticket office. He had watched folks for twenty years as they experienced that first aloneness.

The train had paused for only a minute. Then, with Rob Cameron waving and smiling on the rear platform, it had made its noisy departure.

"Must be nearly down the valley to Ellentown by now," John said.

Sara clutched the shiny black leather purse tighter. It was Rob's last gift.

"Feels like snow in the air, Mother." John's gray head bent to hers.

"Turkey weather."
 "Yes, Thanksgiving's almost here again."
 Sara looked deep into his eyes. "John, he'll be gone for a long time."
 "Yes, Sara."
 Job Reynolds came out on the platform and watched them climb

THE HAMILTON CHORUS

The Hamilton Chorus, of Lancaster, under the direction of Miss Dorothy Schock, will present a evening of music in the Glossbrenner Evangelical U. B. Church, Florin on Sunday, November 4th, at 7:15 P. M.

This program of music by the 45-voice choir is sponsored by the Senior Choir of the local church. Elmer Forwood, president of the local choir, will preside at the service. Other participants will be members of the Glossbrenner choir, who will lead in the reading of Scripture and the offering of evening prayers.

Brittle Stars Blow Tops, Shed Arms, Grow New Ones

Consider the brittle star, shy and streamlined cousin of the starfish. When handled or disturbed, it can cast off any of its five arms, growing new ones at leisure. In some cases it can literally blow its top, then gradually re-cover. Rare specimens of the brittle star have been reported taken recently from California waters off Santa Catalina Island.

The brittle stars, while rare in many of their forms and little known to the average seashore vacationer, are among the commonest creatures on the floors of the seven seas. Something like 1,500 species are recognized. The majority live on the ocean bottom in deep water. They form the largest of five classes of echinoderms, spiny-skinned sea denizens.

The five arms, or rays, of the brittle star are generally long and slender and capable of snakelike movement. Hence, its popular alias is serpent star, and its scientific name, Ophiuroidea, means serpent-tails. The name "brittle star" stems, of course, from the manner in which most species can break off all or parts of their arms, which may reach two-feet in length. Round or pentagonal in shape, the central body varies from pinhead size to as much as two inches in diameter.

The fact that brittle stars are fragile explains why these odd scavengers are little in evidence in shallow waters where waves break. They are abundant, however, where seaweed is thick or in dark crevices of rocks and coral. Tropical waters hold the greatest variety, colors ranging from near black to white. Colder northern depths hold the greatest numbers. They form an important part of the diet of north Atlantic haddock and cod.

When in need of Printing, (anything) kindly remember the Bulletin

"Must be down the valley to Ellentown by now," John said.

Into the old blue sedan. The old car woke up and cleared its throat.

"Need some anti-freeze, I do," John pulled out the choke.

"Maybe a little coffee might help," Sara smiled, but it was only her lips that moved.

They drove seven miles past browned and crisped meadows.

John slowed down near a white, low farmhouse. There was a small sign on the side of an elm tree—"Mrs. Whiteley's Famous Dinners."

Sara nodded in reply to his unasked question. She straightened her hat in the rear view mirror and put on her gloves, taking a long time with each finger. Rob's train must be nearly to Coddington.

There were long, silent minutes between soup and chicken and dessert. After dinner, they went out behind the barn to see the minks, kept in orderly cages. Mrs. Whiteley's boy fished in the pond for sunfish to feed them. Sara bent over to see the tiny creatures and her hair played in the wind. The gray streaks were like a light touch of snow.

She counted the minks. Two large ones, one small one, screened off by himself. A family? Their family had been three—John, Rob, Sara.

"Yes, they are beautiful," she said. "I wish I could look at them without thinking of the coats they are going to make." She smiled, apologetically. "It seems wicked, to kill them, I mean."

Mrs. Whiteley grinned. "Well, Mrs. Cameron, I used to feel sorry for them, but after the first check came in, I never thought about it again."

The train must be at George City now. Another hour and he'd be there. She closed her eyes.

John's arm was around her. "I feel as if I'd been running," she murmured. "Guess I leaned over too long looking at the minks."

They settled themselves in the old car again. They could see the farm on a distant hill.

"I still love it, John. I still like coming around that curve and seeing it, knowing it'll be there."

The car whined in self-pity as it climbed the hill. John drove up to the front door. He fumbled for the key and then just held it in his hand. Something seemed to hold him back. He didn't want to go into the house. He leaned down to pat the old collie who stood waiting there—and saw the note. Pinned to the dog's collar was a scrap of paper. Together John and Sara read it, incredulous. Drawn in the quick scrawl of a boy in a hurry were Mom and Dad—woeful faces above single-line bodies. Mom was clutching the black purse, Dad his keys. Beneath the picture Rob had written in large black letters,

"CHEER UP—YOU SURE LOOK GLOOMY"

"John, you sure look gloomy," Sara repeated—and John began to grin. Sara laughed.

"That boy," he said, "That crazy kid."

He opened the door and they went into their house.
