Reconstructed Ape Skulls Curiously Resemble Man

Castings of reconstructed skulls and other bones of Australopithecus—the curious extinct apelike creatures with primitive human characteristics that lived in South Africa at least a million years ago—have been added to the anthropological collections of the Smithsonian Institution. The originals of the Australopithecus remains, which appear to have opened a new chapter in man's prehistory, are retained at the Peabody Museum in South Africa, but the copies now at the Smithsonian are so exact that they are of essentially equal value to the originals for study by American anthropologists.

The greater part of this material was obtained since 1947 by Dr. Raymond A. Dart, of the University of the Witwatersrand at Johannesburg, from ancient caverns at Makapans in the Central Transvaal. Geologists find it difficult to date these caverns, but they may be at least 1,000,000 years old.

Australopithecus differs from other fossil apes—and from living apes—in several important directions, most notably perhaps in the upright posture. Judging from the pelvis, which is essentially similar to that of modern man, these creatures walked upright. Further evidence of this appears in the balancing of the skull. The so-called foramen magnum, where the skull joins the spine, had shifted forward, and it may therefore be assumed that the head was held erect. Size of the brain, however, was not particularly notable. In addition, the canine teeth and snout were considerably reduced.

Because of the uncertainties about their age, it is doubtful, according to specialists in physical anthropology, whether these creatures could be considered the actual ancestors of modern man. They may represent an evolutionary movement in the human direction that went no further.

Factory Wages Buy More Food Than in 1929

An hour of work in a factory will buy, on the average, a larger quantity of nearly all kinds of food than it would a generation ago, according to the U. S. department of agriculture.

Department figures on food prices and factory wages for 1929 show that the average wage for an hour of factory work would buy 6.4 loaves of bread. Now it would buy 10 loaves.

Farmer's Question Corner

PREPARED BY American Foundation For Animal Health

WHAT ABOUT CAT DISTEMPER?

Q: Is distemper a very serious problem among cats?
A: Yes, it is one of the most common of all cat diseases.

Q: What causes distemper?
A: A highly contagious virus. It affects cats of all ages, but weaned kittens less than a year old are the principal victims.

Q: How does distemper act?
A: First symptoms include loss of appetite, vomiting, extreme weakness. There may be rapid loss of weight. Later there may be scouring, sore ulcerated mouths, nasal discharge, difficulty in feeding. The affected cats will hang over feed and water.

Q: Is distemper always fatal?
A: No, but the death rate may run as high as 80 percent.

Q: Is there any cure?
A: Cats may sometimes be saved by prompt administration of antiferme distemper serum and careful supportive treatment.

Q: What can be done to prevent distemper?
A: Vaccination affords the best protection. The veterinarian administers two small doses of vaccine about 10 days apart. Cats usually are protected for life after they have developed immunity.

Q: Is vaccination expensive?
A: No, it is inexpensive. On farms, cats are so important in control of rodents that the cost of vaccination is a minor thing in comparison to the good they do in saving grain and preventing other rat damage.
