EDITORIAL

The Supreme Court, by a vote of 6 to 3, set President Truman back on his heels by ruling that his seizure of the steel mills was illegal. Now the mills go back to the owners and the workers won't get the pay hike Truman promised them.

THE NEXT STEP

Early in May, the Federal Reserve Board suspended Regulation W, which controlled installment buying. This action obviously stemmed from the fact that there's ample supplies of merchandise in all categories, and shortages are almost unknown in the consumer-goods field.

This was a step in the right direction. And Congress could use it as a precedent for taking a far more important step—the elimination of all prizes and wage controls.

There is only one law which would govern a free nation's economy—and that is the law of supply and demand. There has been a great deal of idle talk as to whether suspension of the artificial controls would result in higher prices or lower prices. No one knows with certainty, and this question is beside the point anyway. Controls hamstringing the economy. They take the drive out of it and discourage initiative. In many instances they fall hardest on the small business and prevent its growth. They substitute the judgment of politicians and professional bureaucrats for natural economic law. A dynamic nation is a free nation—and vice versa.

Congress has held long hearings on the Defense Production Act. Witness after witness has testified to the damage the controls have done and are doing, and has backed that attitude up with facts and figures. It's high time we got rid of them and the Offices of Price Stabilization, the costly administering agency.

PRICES AND INCOME

It is something of an economic axiom that the price of any article is determined largely by how much there is of it—and how badly people want it. And that fact has led to a considerable amount of confusion in the public mind.

Take, for example, so simple and so widely-consumed a product as pork chops. The housewife will argue that the price of these chops is way too high—and automatically reason from that all meat prices are too high. Actually, pork chops are expensive because there are so few of them. After a 240-pound hog is butchered and processed, only about 150 pounds of pork products are left for the butcher to sell. And only 10 pounds of those products are center cut pork chops—the cuts most people like best. So it is entirely natural and inevitable that the chops cost substantially more than other pork products which are just as nutritious. This goes for other kinds of meat as well. Only a small part of a steer, for instance, winds up in the butcher's show window in the form of T-bones.

A tremendous amount of misinformation has been making the rounds concerning the meat price situation. If you told the average housewife that meat costs less now than it did in the 30's she'd look on you as a candidate for the booby-hatch. But meat does cost a little less—if the price is measured in proportion to family incomes, which is the only accurate yardstick. According to U. S. Department of Agriculture figures, meat accounted for 6 percent of the average consumer's disposable income during the 1929-30 period. During the four-year average 1948-51 period, on the other hand, it took 5 1/2 percent. And we eat more meat and better meat now than we did in the past.

Meat prices have risen—certainly. But our incomes, on the average, have risen even more.

However, after the motion was passed, a group of local firemen appeared and opposed this action but Stehman refused to rescind his motion. He said he felt the tree should be removed.

Bids were opened for the resurfacing of tennis courts in the borough but since council failed to note in its advertisement that only two of the four courts would be resurfaced this year, the awarding of a contract to the low bidder was tabled until the bidder could be contacted.
