PROVIDE RANGE EQUIPMENT—If you raise pullets on range during the summer, you owe it to yourself and your pocketbook to feed and water them with well-planned range equipment, say extension poultry specialists of the Pennsylvania State College. Include a covered mash hopper and a continuous-flow waterer.

PLAN BIGGER BUSINESS—With land prices high it is possible to enlarge the farm business without buying more land, reminds William Johnstone, a Penna. State extension agricultural economist. One way is to remodel buildings to care for more livestock. Another way is to increase the carrying capacity of pastures.

MULCH SAVES MOISTURE—Mulches on the flower garden conserve moisture and also save work. If deep enough the mulch will prevent weed growth, says A. O. Rasmussen, Penn State extension ornamental horticulturist. He also suggests mulching shrubby borders and newly planted foundation plantings.

SAVE STORED GRAIN—Make farm grain storages clean, insect-free, birdproof, rodent-proof, and weatherproof, urges John Pepper, extension entomologist of the Pennsylvania State College. Steel bins are especially easy to keep clean and insectproof.

ing records at many tracks and had just won the free-for-all at the Little Valley, N. Y., meet, breaking the track record in each heat.

"The horse was at the top of his form and after the race Amanda turned down an offer of a $10,000 certified check for him without consulting the owner George Engle. She had entered the horse in the Little Valley meet without the knowledge of the owner and was planning a surprise for him by mailing the $1,000 check won in the race.

"As she entered the race track barn to supervise the handling of the horse for his return trip by train to Highspire, she was amazed to find the horse gone and the stable boy, Will Weatherway sound asleep, obviously having been drugged with chloroform.

"Then a middle-aged man with mutton-chop whiskers entered the barn and, flashing a badge, told Miss LaGrave that he was a deputy sheriff. He proposed that she accompany him in his buggy to a nearby gypsy camp, asserting that gypsies had been camped near the race track and that they probably stole the horse.

"Believing herself safe in the hands of the law, Amanda accompanied him, climbed into his buggy and they drove away. After driving some miles over back country roads, he stopped and assisted her to the ground, telling her that the gypsy camp was nearby.

"Suddenly he lashed out with his fist and struck her unconscious with a savage blow across her nose. While she was unconscious, he bound and gagged her tied her to a tree and drove away.

"She was not found until the next day when three boys saw her plight, came to her aid and took her to their home where she told her story. The boys' father drove her back to Little Valley.

"The local police took up the hunt for the missing horse, the thieves and the man who had kidnapped Miss LaGrave. She boarded a train for Highspire to tell George Engle how the horse was lost.

"Then Matthew Engle entered the case. He figured that most stolen horses in New York and Pennsylvania were taken to Horse Hollow and he assumed that there the horse would be if not already sold. He left his beard grow, donned his oldest clothes and set out for Wellsboro, Pa. There he presented his credentials to the local police, explaining his plan of action and walked to the Horse Hollow area.

"After several nights, a man came to a tavern there who resembled Amanda's abductor and he scraped up an acquaintance with him. They drank together and the wily old constable became so friendly he accompanied the false deputy back to the Hollow. Sure enough, tied to a spreading beech tree, stood the missing Major Forrest, dirty and uncurried but the same mettlesome champion.

"He can beat anything on the road or track, said the hilarious horse thief. "Let me see his paces," said Engle. They harnessed him to a light runabout and both got in and drove out of the gloomy hollow. Engle managed to take the lines, to try him out, and find a place for breakfast and drove around Wellsboro until they came to the Town Hall, where the constable drew out a sharp whistle which he blew. Out came the Chief of Police and several of his plain clothes men and placed the horse thief under arrest, with the John Doe warrant Engle had carried in his pocket.

"Major Forrest was roaded back to Highspire and retired for the winter but after that experience never quite regained his form."

"The robber made a complete confession, Horse Hollow was raided and a motley gang of Indian, Gypsy and other outcasts cluttered the cells of Wellsboro Jail."

Upsy-Daisy Candy Custards

Let that old family favorite, Cup Custard, turn up with a new look and a new flavor twist by the simple addition of diced chocolate and coconut candy placed in the bottom of each cup before baking. Best of all, this tasty dessert, with health-giving energy because it calls for eggs and milk as a base, takes but moments to prepare and can be served at any time:

Mounds Chocolate Frosted Custards

2 Mounds bars, diced 1/2 teaspoon salt
3 eggs 1/2 teaspoon vanilla
2 tablespoons sugar 2 cups milk, scalded

Lightly butter 6 six-ounce custard cups; divide Mounds among cups. Beat eggs slightly in medium-size bowl; stir in sugar, salt, and vanilla. Add milk slowly, stirring constantly, until blended. Strain into prepared custard cups; place cups in deep baking pan; add hot water to half fill baking pan. Bake in slow oven (325 F.) 35 minutes, or until knife inserted in center comes out clean. Remove cups from hot water at once; cool 10 minutes; loosen around edges with knife or spatula; turn out onto individual dessert dishes. (Chocolate-coconut sauce will dribble down over custards.) Serve warm or chilled.
