OWL LAFFS

BY A WISE OWL

Earl Miller got quite a charge out of his granddaughter the other day. He was busily engaged in swatting flies in the house as his granddaughter watched with interest. Finally she asked: "Do you like to swat flies, grandpa?" "Yes, I do," replied Earl, and continued to do so. Not too long after that he noticed his grandchild holding the kitchen door wide open, and he exclaimed: "Close the door, the flies will come in." The child answered: "I know. I'm leaving them in cause you said you like to swat 'em." - - - Each day you'll find the small fry amaze you with their logic.

A Main St. father can also attest to the fact. Sunday he was trying to nap, but his children wanted his attention. They tried to rouse him several times but he pretended to be sleeping. Finally his daughter lifted one of his eyelids and announced to her brother: "Keep trying. He's still in there."

I'm afraid a Solunga lady is going to tangle with the law. Today when I passed her place I noticed she had a brush and a can of paint at the rear of her new red car. Unable to figure just what she had in mind, I stopped and spoke to her. As the conversation progressed, she said: "Look at the good job I just did on our license plate. I painted it red to match the car." - - - I almost howled but wait til her spouse gets home tonight and sees it!

Irvin Fritz says he got perfect care while at the hospital recently but he got quite perturbed one night. He had fallen into a sound sleep and was dozing away when he felt someone shake him violently. After much shaking he finally woke to see a nurse standing by him. "I'm sorry, sir, but I forgot to give you your sleeping pill," Fritz says he could have clubbed her, but he took it. What made him furious was the fact that he couldn't fall asleep the rest of the night.

Little Willie, in the best of fashions, fell in the fire and burned to ashes. Presently the room grew chilly. But no one liked to poke up Willie.

An inmate of a booby hatch was about to be discharged.

"Now, sir, that you're cured," said the chief psychiatrist, "what are your plans?"

"Well," replied the man, "I used to be a lawyer, so I may go back to practicing law. I'm a certified public accountant, and maybe I'll follow that profession. I speak seven languages, so I might go into the State Department. If I find I don't like any of them, I might become an architect or a plane pilot."

He got up, placed his left hand on his hip, faced away from that direction, and placed the back of his hand against his forehead. Then he extended his fingers and said, "Or maybe I'll become a tea kettle."

Did you write this poem yourself?" asked the English teacher. "Every line of it," replied Ronnie. "Well, I'm glad to meet you, Edgar Allan Poe. I thought that you were dead long ago."

Over at the Carnival a few weeks ago, Tom Brown said: "Boy, my feet burn like fire! Do you think a mustard bath would help?" "Sure replied "Mouse" Myers. Nothing like a little mustard on hot dogs!"

When the mother lion woke from an afternoon sleep, she saw her young son chasing a man around a tree. "Junior, how many times must I tell you not to play with your food!"

Jimmy Markley sent us another joke in his last letter:

The alert had sounded during one of London's bombings, and the husband jumped out of bed, calling to his wife to get up. When she didn't he asked, "What are you waiting for?" "I've lost my false teeth," came the reply. "Never mind them. It's bombs he's dropping, not sandwiches."
