The Dutch Philosopher

(AS OVERHEARD BY JOHN BOYD)

Well, Mrs. Espenshate! Come on in and tell me how you are getting along with your packing for New York City. I am all done still except for a few things like my toothbrush and hair-comb and such like. I got it all into Chake's suit-case.

I am not done yet because I can't decide right what I want to wear in New York City. I don't want to walk around looking like such a country chake. Chake says I ain't to worry because nobody except the people we pay out our money to will even notice we are alive. He says we would have to dress plain like the Amish if we wanted people to look twice at us, let alone see how we was dressed.

Chorch says, since we was going to New York he was thinking of going to Washington, D. C., to see the inauguration parade.

Well now, I never realized we would be in New York when Eisenhower is inaugurated. Maybe we could see it in one of them there tellyvision theaters. That parade I would really like to see even though I am about one half democrat as you might say.

Well, when we get to New York we will ask somebody at the hotel where we can see it—or look in the papers. I would laugh if we got to see the parade better than Chorch does. They will probably have a lot of tellyvision cameras—and switch the scenes around to where the most exciting things are at. No doubt there will be a camera right where Ike makes the oath of office on a Bible.

No doubt. But, still and all, it won't be like being right there yourself in person.

No, thank goodness, that it won't. When it's over we can chust walk out in peace and eat our lunch or supper and not get pushed around by them wild republicans. That is what I like most about tellyvision. You don't get into crowds and get pushed around.

And maybe get your pocket-book picked besides. I see in the paper that all the big well-known pocket-pickers is planning to be in Washington for the inauguration. You had best tell Chorch to watch himself.

I will, but he won't pay any attention to me. He would ask me if I thought he ought to wear a money belt around his waist under his beevedeeds, like in the middle aitches. What all have you got in your suit-case?

Oh, a lot of stockings and an extra pair of shoes and a couple of dresses and I put in a suit of long wool underwear in case it gets real cold. I chust can't stand silk underwear in real cold weather. And I will of course wear my suit and my fur coat on the train to go. Won't that be enough?

It should be. Are you taking your galoshes, too?

Oh yes. This time of year a body shouldn't be without them. Ain't you taking any?

No, mine are too dumb looking for New York. I am going to wait and see if it snows, and if it does, I am going to get such a pair of stylish fancy ones at one of the stores—and such a new umbrella too, if it rains hard.

Well now, that ain't a bad idea. I believe I will do the same. After all, the men couldn't complain if the weather got bad and we bought things to guard our health, as a body could say for an excuse like.

How about a raincoat?

Well now, Mrs. Espenshate, that I don't have—but then a body could easy buy one of them new cellophane things.

Yes, well. It all reminds me of the time that Chorch went moose-hunting up in Canada. He took a whole trunk full of the things he had bought to take along and when he got to where the mooses were at, he found that he could of bought everything there at a cheneral store for less money.

It makes a body laugh still but I see what you mean. We will chust take empty suitcases to New York and come home with them full—and maybe save money.

Well now, it ain't far from the truth and I will confess that my suitcase ain't going to be hard to lift up and carry.

Well, we shall see how it all works out. And chust think—this time next week we will be there in New York City—

And a republican will be president for the first time in twenty years. I guess we will never forget next week as long as we live.

No, that we won't. It all seems chust like a dream.

Now I got to get home as usual chust when things get interesting. This eating business is something a person chust has to take care of—inauguration or no inauguration. But at that, I am skipping a little this week on food.

I know. I know. But don't skimp too much—it ain't safe.

I know. Good bye now. Good bye.
