75 Per Cent Farm Fires Preventable

Inspection is Answer To Farm Fire Prevention

Two University of Illinois researchers believe that farmers could prevent 75 per cent of farm fires if they would inspect for hazards and eliminate them.

The two researchers, Dean Winter and Gilbert Sauer, of the University's agricultural engineering department, reached their conclusion after inspection of 53 farms in that state.

"It's lightning, faulty wiring and poor heating systems that are burning down most Illinois farm buildings," they report. "On the farms we visited, we often found the wiring or the furnace in poor condition. Lots of farmers didn't have lightning rods."

"Most of these conditions could be corrected by farmers themselves. Our survey found that probably 75 per cent of farm fires could be prevented if fire hazards were pointed out to farmers and they would remove them."

The only answer is routine inspection by the farmer every few months and quick elimination of the hazards.

Farm Wife to Encourage Building, Remodeling

A group of researchers are convinced there's some truth in the warning, "never underestimate the power of a woman."

The real impetus to home building on the nation's farms will probably be generated by Mrs. Farm Wife herself, they say.
Farm women, explain Minneapolis-Honeywell researchers, have 51 per cent more children than city women, and obviously larger families—50 per cent of farm children under 18 are in families with four or more children. Therefore, they see the big building push coming from this annual farm family baby crop. These births create a demand by the farm wife for roomier quarters.

Secondly, the expected manpower shortage on farms means that many a farmer will remodel his home to make housework easier for his wife who will have to shoulder more of the chores. The researchers see more automatic equipment, ranging from heating systems to dishwashers, being widely installed to help her keep pace with her new labors.

And if that's not convincing enough, the diligent researchers further point out that the signs are that farm incomes will be up some 5 per cent over last year's record estimate of $37.5 million, indicating that farm families will have the money for construction or remodeling purposes.

Blue Ribbon

The 1951 and 1952 grand champion of the Denver stock show and 1952 grand champion of the Phoenix show, was purchased by Roy A. Kropp for breeding purposes at his Chardon Farm at Grayslake, Ill. He purchased the prize animal from Jack Howley of Minneapolis for $50,000.

200,000 Farm Tractors Operate on Butane Gas

More than 200,000 farm tractors, either factory designed or converted, now run on liquefied petroleum gas. Many farmers report that by using liquefied petroleum gas, engine maintenance can be reduced up to 50 per cent. Known also as butane, propane, tank and bottled gas, the fuel also has many household applications such as cooking, house heating, water heating, refrigeration and incineration.

SCIENCE and your Health
VACATIONS—AND HEALTH by Science Features

A very special health problem plagues Americans at about this time every year. It might be called "vacationitis." It is characterized by such symptoms as hay fever, sunburn, and poison ivy rash. It is one of the hazards of the annual family trek to the shore or mountains.

Vacationitis usually isn't a serious ailment. Hay fever can be avoided by getting allergy shots, sunburn by gradual exposure to the sun, and poison ivy—by staying away from the poison ivy plant.

But there are some diseases encountered at vacation-time which can be quite serious. One of these is Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever, which, despite its name, may be found in any part of the country, particularly during the summer months. The disease is transmitted from animals to man by ticks—which means that those who go on hunting trips are especially likely to come in contact with it.

Rocky Mountain Spotted Fever can be very serious. Before the advent of the antibiotic drugs it was sometimes fatal, but since that time the death rate has dropped sharply. Cases have been reported in which patients treated with tetracycline showed a disappearance of symptoms within 48 hours after the antibiotic was given.

In any event, health authorities recommend that wherever you go on vacation you determine the location of the nearest physician—just in case.
