Grantham Choir To Sing In Harrisburg

The Grantham Oratorio Society, under the direction of Earl D. Miller, with Robert Clippinger at the organ, will appear in their annual Hymn Festival in the Forum of the State Education Building, Harrisburg, Sunday afternoon, January 24, at 2:30.

Numbers to be sung by the 200-voice choir now in its eighth year of oratorio work will include Purcell's "O Sing Unto the Lord"; "Send Forth Thy Spirit" by Joseph Schuetky; "Hallelujah," from the Beethoven oratorio "Mount of Olives"; and "The Heavens Are Telling" from Haydn's oratorio "The Creation."

On May 4, the Oratorio Society will feature two outstanding guest soloists in Haydn's "Creation," namely: Charles Curtis, celebrated tenor of New York, who has appeared in oratorios all over the country, and John MacDonald, baritone of Chicago, who appeared several years ago with the Grantham Oratorio Society as "Elijah."

For the Hymn Festival there will be no tickets or admission fee, but an offering will be taken. Tickets for the Spring Concert will be available from members of the Oratorio Society or at Box I, Grantham, Penna., after January 23, 1954.

Dimes, Friends Aid 4 in Family Felled by Polio

A Kansas farmer has discovered that a dime neighbor in time of need is more valuable than silver and gold.

Robert Stahl and his family were saved from heartache and tragedy by the action of good neighbors.

Stahl, his wife and four children were busy on their 127-acre farm near Wichita, Kans., last summer—getting set for the fall harvesting when polio struck.

First, little 3-year-old Troy came down with the disease. Then Ronald, who is 10, contracted polio. A few days later, Charles, 12, and Patsey, 14, also went on the sick list.

Finally, Mrs. Stahl herself was afflicted. The whole family was moved to St. Francis hospital, Wichita, leaving Stahl alone on his farm.

For a while, he didn't know what to do. The financial burden had been lifted through a check of $100,000 from the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, but the burden of work remained.

Then his neighbors volunteered to take over his farm until the family was out of danger. These neighbors pitched in and Stahl went to town. For days, he kept a vigil at the bedside of his wife and children.

With the combined help of other good neighbors, the National Foundation for Infantile Paralysis, the family began to improve.

Stahl went back to his farm, comforted by the knowledge that his family was being cared for. His neighbors had done a wonderful job of keeping things going on the farm. So he was able to carry on.

Today Mrs. Stahl and three of the children are fully recovered. Charles, the 12-year-old, still has one partially paralyzed leg but Mrs. Stahl hopes he too will soon be well.

"Then maybe," she said, "it'll all seem like just a bad dream." The National Foundation hopes so, too. That's why it has launched a huge polio prevention program involving gamma globulin and a trial vaccine. If the program succeeds, families like the Stahls may be free of the polio threat forever.

The car, owned by Robert and Betty Lightner, Rheems, was parked in front of Snyder's garage when the boys stole it. Snyder chased the car and the boys abandoned it near the Keystone Diner and ran across a field. They were picked up walking along a country road about an hour later.
