"Education is the Apprenticeship of Life"

ROBERT A. WILLMOTT, 1809 - 1863

How well these simple words have weathered the years! Today, as then, their wisdom stands unchallenged as a vital stimulus to continued progress.

The development of our resources, the molding of our society, the shaping of individuals . . . these have been the tasks assigned to education. Not to teach what to think but how to think so that mature judgment may be passed and wise and just decisions reached. Thus, education forms the foundation for liberty, standing as a bulwark against those who would destroy freedom.

Our whole society has harvested the fruits of education . . . no single group has been a greater beneficiary than another. But the very contributions education has made instill in every phase of our society a responsibility for its encouragement, support and development. American business and industry . . . as important members of our free society . . . are no exceptions.

Pennsylvania Power & Light Company, realizing its responsibility . . . and being aware that independent colleges and the free-thinking young people they produce are indispensable to our way of life . . . has inaugurated a new program of educational assistance.

Chas. E. Oates
President
