More Help Ahead for Farmers . . . Engineers Try Electricity on Silos

Experimental electric elevator fills 36-foot silo successfully.

By IRA MILLER
Farm Electrification Bureau

Farm electrification's progress is tied directly to the "never say die" spirit of the nation's agricultural engineers. Take silo filling, for example.

Silo filling had been considered a "big power" chore—too big for electric motors. Apparently, this is not the case, although it will be some time yet before the first successful experimental electric ensilage elevator "graduates from college" to the farm. Until that time comes, tractors and stationary gasoline engines can be expected to take care of silo filling operations. Also, they probably handle the ensilage cutting jobs when they're done at the silo. This latter way of cutting ensilage is changing, however. An increasing amount of grass and corn silage now is being cut in the field with mobile harvesters rather than by stationary equipment on the farmstead.

Ensilage, in many cases, now arrives at the silo ready for storage.

And power is required only to elevate it into silos quickly, efficiently and economically. This is being done at Penn State College with a 36-foot vertical elevator operated by a 5 horsepower portable motor.

The college-designed elevator is made almost entirely of plywood and white pine boards. It has a 16-gauge sheet metal bottom on which the endless chain, flights and forage "rider." Tests record that it can elevate grass silage at a rate of 8 to 10 tons per hour—about the same speed as that obtained with a blower powered by a 2-horsepower tractor. It elevates corn silage at a rate of 25 to 30 tons per hour. This is considerably better than that of the suction elevator powered by a 35-horsepower gasoline engine.

The experimental elevator delivers ensilage into the center of the silo. Electricity can handle silo filling chores successfully, tractors can be used in the field. It costs about 85 cents per hour to fill a silo electrically, with a tractor-operated blower.

Florin Scouts Given Charter

Charter Night was observed by the newly organized Florin Boy Scout Troop No. 63 Monday evening in an outdoor meeting at the Florin Hall grounds. The Florin Lions Club members, sponsors of the troop, were guests and attended the affair instead of having their regular meeting.

Following the invocation by Rev. John Gable, lunch was served by the Scouts. They also put on several Scouting demonstrations. The troop committee members presented each of the eleven Scouts with kerchiefs and slides.

Robert Hamilton and Robert Gauker, Lancaster, spoke to the committee on their obligations to Scouting. Mr. Hamilton presented the charter to Paul E. Hess, institutional representative of the Lions Club.

Stanley Booth, Florin, gave a Boy Scout trophy to the Lions Club which his troop of Florin Boy Scouts had won in 1934 for being the most outstanding troop in the county. Mr. Booth was scoutmaster at the time. James Garber is present Scoutmaster and Don Seiders, assistant.

CHILDREN UNDERTAKE PROJECT

The sixth grade children of the local elementary school undertook their first "extra-curricular" project this week. In former years there had been a fish pond in the west lawn. Later it was filled in and recently it had been only a patch of weeds.

The boys of the class dug up the weeds and prepared the land for planting and the girls planted flowers in the plot on Tuesday afternoon.
