Urges Hunters To Respect Signs For Safety Zones

Now that hunting season is here again, let us make sure it is open season on game and not on people, reminds Harrison Nolt, Columbia R1, farmer and president of the state-wide Pennsylvania Rural Safety Council.

"Seven rural people were killed by guns in Penna. during the three year period, 1951-53, according to records of Samuel Horst, Farm Safety Chief in the State Department of Public Instruction. The Penna. Game Commission reports 34 deaths in hunting accidents in 1953, which was ten more than in the previous year," Nolt said, "and there were 509 non-fatal hunting accidents in 1953, Commission records indicate."

Nolt urged all hunters to respect "Safety Zone" and "No Trespass" signs and to be especially on the alert for farmers husking corn and doing other work in the fields.

Society Makes Report For Two Months

The Lancaster County Society for Crippled Children and Adults had 28 new patients who were seen in the orthopedic clinics, and 23 new patients who were seen in the Treatment Center. They represented 37 types of diagnoses. 20 of these were given treatments by the physical therapist. A total of 212 patients were seen at these clinics by the orthopedic surgeons, Doctors F. David Nutter and Marvin C. Goodman. A number of patients were examined by the pediatricians, Doctors Charles Kurtz and David Coursin, and by the neuro-surgeon, Dr. John Polcyn. These two services have added to our orthopedic clinic evaluation.

One hundred eighty therapy treatments were given by the therapists in the Treatment Center at 129 E. Orange St., Lancaster, Pa. 301 were given to patients in Lancaster city and county in their homes. This service means much to those who sit in their home. Two and a half months ago we visited a handicapped individual who had sat in a wheel chair for 12 months. She was sure she could not walk, but she is now using a walker to get about in her house, she helps to do the cooking and is beginning to walk with the use of canes.

Sixty-seven visits were made in Lancaster county homes in checking on braces, shoes and casts.

Four operations were performed by the orthopedic surgeons.

The corrective swimming classes were again resumed in October. Mrs. I. Haines Shertzer is the swimming instructor and she is assisted by Miss Constance Stretcher, physical therapist. They are held each Friday at 3 p. m. at a Red Feather agency - the YMCA.

Through the Community Chest the books of the Crippled Children Society were audited this month.

A total of 402 volunteer hours were given by Easter Seal workers, Rotarians, Shriner, Board members, Junior League and friends of Crippled Children.

The pre-school Cerebral Palsy Center opened in September. When it was found that the Joint Hempfield Twp. School District needed the space in the Rohrerstown Elementary School for an afternoon kindergarten session, the Lancaster Township School District allowed us to use the facilities of the Burrows School at East Orange St. and Ranck Ave. for our 1 to 3 p. m. sessions Monday through Friday. We have fourteen children registered, but because of transportation difficulties in the distant areas of the county several have not been able to attend.

The Craft Class continues to meet each Thursday A. M. in the Treatment Center. They do rug weaving, make towels, tint photographs, sand and make cutting boards and walkers for the society.

The Venture Club, the Secretaries Association, Easter Seal volunteers and friends are busy working on Easter Seal files as a volunteer service.

Former Polluted Streams Being Stocked With Fish

Harrisburg — One hundred and ten miles of Pennsylvania streams are being stocked with fish for the first time as a result of the Clean Streams program of the Sanitary Water Board, Dr. Russell E. Teague, Secretary of Health and Chairman of the Board said today.

The additional stocking resulting from the improvement brought about by the Clean Streams program, is being done in the Schuylkill, Susquehanna and Shenango rivers. Sections of the Schuylkill being newly stocked are six miles in Philadelphia (previously announced and not included in total) 16 miles in Berks Co.; and 21 miles in Montgomery Co. Other sections of that river in the latter two counties had been previously stocked following the completion of the river cleanup job and it proved highly successful.

In addition to that mileage, dams on the Schuylkill River, including Fairmount Dam in Philadelphia, covering a total of about 2,200 acres, are also being stocked. According to C. R. Buller, Chief Fish Culturist of the State Fish Commission, the records show that as far back as 1881 the Schuylkill River had not been suitable for fish of the water caused by coal because of the acid conditions mines.

Sections of the North Branch Susquehanna River are being stocked for the first time on the regular program. This action is taken as a result of the successful experimental planting last year of several hundred bass. The sections of that river being stocked are six miles in Luzerne Co.; 20 miles in Columbia Co., and 11 miles in Montour and Northumberland counties.

Another river section placed on the regular stocking program this fall is the 20-mile stretch of the Lehigh in Lehigh and Northampton counties. In that case also some fish were planted last year on experimental basis. The project was successful and resulted in the section being placed on the regular stocking program.

The other river making its debut into the class of fishing streams, is the Shenango, 16 miles of which in Lawrence Co. are being stocked this fall.

Reclamation of the Schuylkill has been brought about by the abatement of pollution caused by silt from the anthracite colliers; the removal from the river of the silt accumulated over the years, and the complete treatment of sewage and some industrial wastes by the municipalities along the river from Reading to Philadelphia. Industrial establishments which do not discharge their wastes to the city sewer systems have their own treatment plants. All the communities, excepting Bridgeport, have complied with orders of the Sanitary Board which directs the Clean Stream program and built new disposal plants or enlarged existing plants to provide greater capacity and complete treatment after the silt abatement at the colliers had been accomplished.

Improvement to the North Branch Susquehanna to the extent that it has been placed on the fish stocking list have been brought about by the abatement of discharges of coal silt, all the collieries throughout the anthracite fields having complied with the abatement orders of the Sanitary Water Board and installed desilting systems.

Accumulations of silt over the past years in the Susquehanna are washed down stream in times of high water. The size of the river and the heavy water flow makes it possible for the river to cleanse its own channel. In the case of the Schuylkill dredging was necessary to remove the silt because the river is smaller and the water flow therefore not as great. Because of these factors the accumulations were too great to be washed away. The smaller size and lesser flow of the river also made it necessary that dams be built to catch the silt washed into the river from the culm banks accumulated over many years.

The silt is periodically dredged from the dams.

Improvement of the Lehigh River has been brought about by abatement of pollution from coal mines, industries and municipalities. The largest abatement project was the construc-

Less Daylight Increases Dangers Of Driving

Now that daylight's duration is much shorter and night closes in rapidly while many motorists are traveling homeward, drivers must be more then ever on the alert because of dusk's deceptive shadows, reduced visibility and will o' the wisp reflections, advises Keystone Automobile Club.

"Too many motorists rely on their eyes to perform as accurately in dark as in daylight," declares Edward P. Curran, the Club's Safety Director. "Many fail to realize that their vision differs as day does from night and that mental, physical and visual adjustments must be made in order to avert tragedy. In many cases, drivers have not readjusted summer habits to the shorter periods of daylight and nightfall catches them with their guard down.

"Motorists should slow down during darkness, have car lights checked frequently, always lower headlights at approach of oncoming vehicles, carry flares for emergencies, and always pull off the travelable portion of the highway when stopping for any reason.

"Pedestrians should be cautioned to always walk on sidewalks or on the shoulder and facing traffic if there is no path or sidewalk, cross at intersections, wear light-colored clothing if possible, and give one's judgment plenty of room to spare when estimating the speed or closeness of an oncoming vehicle.

"Improved road engineering and highway lighting have done much to reduce the night hazards, but motorists and pedestrians alike must depend on themselves to keep each other safe and out of trouble.

"Play it safe and you'll stay safe."
