

OWL LAFFS

BY A WISE OWL

I dare not mention her name, but I know a dame on East Main Street who always carries a marriage license made out in her name and "To whom it may concern."

Remember several weeks ago, when we had in this column about Henry J. Engle, proprietor of the Central Hotel, going to the mountains for his vacation with John (Wacker) Duschl, and forgetting his suitcase of clothing? — — — Well, we were informed that we were wrong, he did not forget his clothes — — — Anyhow, if it wasn't his clothing, it must have been food, because Henry stopped in at a store on the way up and asked for TEN watermelons.

Beware of women who stroke your hair. They frequently are after your scalp.

Last Tuesday night while visiting in Florin I saw Jonas Linard out in his garden pouring something on his tomato plants. I stopped and asked him what it was.

He told me it was alcohol. "Alcohol! What on earth for?" I asked.

Jonas quickly answered: "I think I can raise 'em stewed."

It takes a baby two years to learn how to talk and a man 35 years to learn to keep his mouth shut.

Sunday a local church became so crowded that the pastor decided to have the verger stand outside with a notice reading: "House Full."

Just then a local gent in a golfing outfit ran up and wanted to enter. Upon being refused admission he said he had a urgent message to deliver to his wife—it was a matter of life or death.

The verger, a kind man, eventually succumbed. "All right," he said, "you can slip in—but heaven help you if I catch you praying!"

Maybe most people can't stand prosperity, but then, most people don't have it.

The other day a West Main street boy asked his Pop, what is a low-brow?

Pop replied: "A low-brow, my son, is a person who likes the funny papers, snappy stories, girl shows, and the like, and doesn't mind saying so."

Son: "And what is a high-brow?"

Pop: "A high-brow, son, is a low-brow who won't admit it."

Middle age is the time when that gleam in your eye is just the sun reflecting off your glasses.

Since men who take care of sheep are called shepherds, why aren't men who take care of cows called cowards?

A Columbia Avenue man says that every now and then he gives his wife a big kiss and it does wonders for her — — — and it also stops her talking for a few minutes.

In a nearby town a florist fired one of his help because put these words on a funeral wreath when the fire chief died:

GONE TO HIS LAST FIRE.

I heard one of my neighbors had some money left him and when I asked him about it he said: "Yeah, it left me long ago."

LEGISLATIVE ROUND-UP

HARRISBURG — Pennsylvania's legislative front was anything but quiet this week as the state senate took under its wing the Leader Administration class income tax package which last week slipped through the House of Representatives in a surprise 108-98 vote.

Interestingly the needed votes for the Democratic tax plan in the House came last week only a few hours before the final vote on the controversial tax package was scheduled. At that time a sudden switch on the part of a big Allegheny County union local in favor of the income tax broke the hard core of resistance on the part of the Allegheny legislative delegation.

Boiling Republican members in the Senate, irked no end because the Democratic House leadership failed to send the approved tax bill to the upper house immediately following passage, are more determined than ever to kill the bill.

The delay may have cost them the needed strength to carry out this plan, for as this is written there is no concrete indication of the success or failure of organized labor and administration forces to work over the GOP Senate membership in a desperate search for the needed two GOP votes to put across the tax levy in the upper house.

Had the tax bills gone over immediately to the Senate last week following passage in the lower house, the strength was there to kill off the bills at that time. A week delay may well mean the difference.

Elsewhere on the legislative front a compromise between Senate and House versions of Fair Employment Practices legislation was in prospect this week after the Senate approved an amended version in which House Democrats are not expected to concur.

Before the House this week is a Senate-passed bill that would require all banks in a county to be informed in cases where a branch is proposed to be established.

A secondarily controversial measure up for consideration would require industries using more than ten gallons of water a minute from underground wells to obtain a certificate of use from the state — the intent being to regulate the exhausting of underground water supplies of the state.

A few new bills continued to find their way into the legislative hopper during the week, including those which would increase the compensation of county assessors of fourth to eighth class counties;

Increase the number (to 160) of scholarships offered by the state as well as upping their value to $200;

Regulate the sale and distribution of ice cream and related frozen products;

Make an appropriation to match federal funds for the flushing of mine voids under residential and business areas; Regulate safety requirements of vehicles transporting children to camps; Amend the Local Tax Law by excluding religious property from taxation of property sold or purchased.

Sixteen Cows Are Tested Under Program

PENNSYLVANIA LEADS IN PRODUCTION OF SPECIAL STEELS

HARRISBURG - No doubt a surprise to many a Pennsylvanian is the fact that the Keystone today leads all other states in production of special steels - or more technically, ferro-alloys.

In fact it accounts for 30% of the total shipments and 38 per cent of the value of those shipments. Historically the best known of these alloys is that called "spiegeleisen" (mirror iron) - an alloy of iron, carbon and manganese.

Importantly, this and a similar alloy - ferro-manganese - are used exclusively in most processes of steel production.

Ferro-silicon, a mixture of iron and the non-metallic element - silicon - has in one form the attractive name of "silvery pig-iron". It is used in making a special spring steel.

Iron is alloyed with many other metals, including molybdenum, tungsten, nickel, cobalt, titanium, vanadium, columbium and zirconium. These impart to steel, the properties without which many of the familiar home devices could not be made to function and operate.

Steel which remains strong and hard at high temperatures are necessary as tools in many processes of manufacture.
