CHIROPRACTORS ATTEND CONVENTION

Local Chiropractors will attend the 10th Annual Convention and Educational Symposium of the Penna. Chiropractic Society in Philadelphia, Pennsylvania on Oct. 7, 8, 9. They are Drs. A. W. Leonard, and C. H. Stites, Mt. Joy. They will be among approximately 600 Chiropractors from throughout the State of Pennsylvania who are expected to attend.

Convention speakers will include Dr. W. A. Quigley, Director of Mental Health, Palmer School of Chiropractic, Davenport, Iowa; Dr. R. N. Kissinger, Roentgenologist, National College of Chiropractic, Chicago, Illinois and Dr. L. J. Steinbach, Vice-president, Lincoln College of Chiropractic, Indianapolis, Ind.

Among the issues expected to be brought up for convention action will be whether Chiropractors will be included in the Federal Social Security Program, ratification of a change in the By-law of the Society in electing its District Directors, and the expansion of its Public Relations plan.

Climaxing the State Society's Convention will be a dinner dance in Philadelphia marking the end of Spinal Hygiene Week which is being observed by the Chiropractic Profession from Oct. 1 to Oct. 7.

The Pennsylvania Story: Republican-Controlled Senate Keeps Legislature In Session

By MASON DENISON
Pennsylvania News Service
Harrisburg — Last week's awkward hassle between the House and Senate over whether the House of Representatives should be permitted to recess until early December — while the august gentlemen of the upper chamber remained in session—has far more to it than meets the eye.

When you come right down to it there actually is little reason why the House should not have been permitted to go home. Practically all of its important legislative matters have been cleared up and some 300-plus House passed bills are now clogged up in Senate windpipes awaiting action by that chamber.

However it isn't as simple as that. Democratic administration forces control the House—that is, when they can keep them all in line. On the other hand Republicans have tooth-and-tail control of the Senate—a combination conducive to almost anything but brotherly love.

Consequently when House Democrats proposed a recess for the lower chamber—one house can't be out of sight of the other for more than three days without other's consent—Republicans in control of the Senate craftily slanted their eyes and allowed at first as how that might just be possible.

Well, when the showdown came last week on the question—formally, that is—Republicans had somehow seen the light, or at least a light of some sort, and announced that they just couldn't go along with any such shenanigans. No, they wouldn't excuse the House.

At that point some of the democratic brethren nearly blew their wigs. In fact, so touched was Democratic House Leader Albert S. Reading that in the teeth-gnashing spree that ensued, had he had a set of store teeth in his mouth instead of his own, chances are good that the membership would have been showered with bits of porcelain.

Needless to say between the sly grins of Republicans and the cloudy glares of Democrats, the Legislative atmosphere last week, and this week too for that matter, has been anything but invigorating.

But why this ruckus over a recess? Actually it looks like Democrats were somewhat unwittingly caught in a political mousetrap. This is why:

In the local elections this fall and the important State-National elections next year Republican stalwarts can point with pride to the fact that they insisted that the Legislature stay in session to attend to its business—while Democrats wanted to go home.

At the moment this point may seem somewhat unimportant, what with all the seemingly good and plausible reasons Democrats have to offer for their recessing plan—but the fact remains, tragically enough perhaps, that when the chips are down a year hence the electorate has the ugly habit of ignoring excuses or reasons, the main point of concern revolving only around the act or action that actually took place.

It is typical though of the constant juggling for position that occurs day in and day out here in the State Capital—teeth-gnashing and wailing notwithstanding.

ESTATES SETTLED

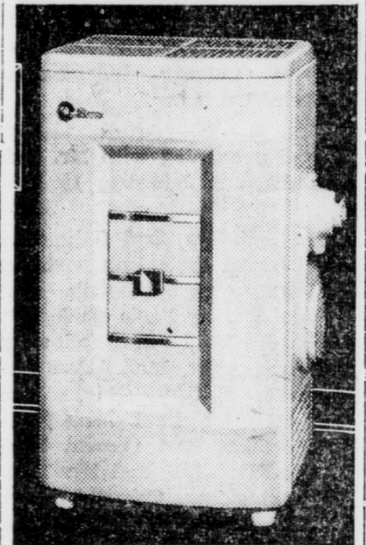

Among the twenty-three estates settled in Lancaster County through Orphans Court last Friday, three are of local interest. A total of $127.50 was received from the estate of Miss Alice N. Strickler, Mt. Joy R1, by the Women's Society for Christian Service of the Salunga Methodist Church. Miss Strickler died October 15, 1954 at the age of eighty. The total value of the Strickler estate was $3,520.43.

Others include the estate of Arthur D. Garber, Mount Joy Township, $26,286.81; and E. Lowell Sumpman, Mount Joy, $1,173.41.

FLORIN MAN FINED
