The Pennsylvania Story

Harrisburg — The next few weeks are undoubtedly going to be somewhat awkward and embarrassing ones around the old village square as Pennsylvania's lawmakers go about the task of seeking return engagements in the Legislature.

There are no ands, ifs ors and buts about it — for this year every one of the 210 seats in the State House of Representatives are up on the auction block as well as half of the fifty Senate seats.

The first step in this direction is to gain signatures on nominating petitions — the first day for this effort being Jan. 31. At this point some of the blokes are debating whether to run for office again or run for the woods.

A number of the lads, after the past year's sojourn in legislative halls here in Harrisburg, are already viewing with a shudder the unpalatable record of non-accomplishment made by the 1955 and still going strong legislative session.

Early testing of sentiment indicates that some strong ear-earning is taking place back on the home village squares as, rather irate and disgusted citizenry' debates whether or not it is worthwhile sending back here the same gents responsible for the current legislative mess.

The fact that after thirteen months of sessioning no budget and-tax program has been evolved as yet apparently has not been overlooked by the home-folks as lawmakers on bended knee and ear plead for a signature or two on their nominating petition.

The word on the home front, according to some of the legislative stalwarts just isn't good. On the one hand folks are delighted that since the end of the biennium last May 31 they have not had to pay any tax such as a sales tax or income tax—but on the other hand the clouds are blackened as they recall that they'll have to make it up with a higher tax rate ultimately.

What really struck home though was the inability of state government to make good on local state aid commitments such as school subsidies, hospital aid and the like. Nothing has driven home the painful fiscal facts of life to John Q. Citizen as has this ruckus.

Knocking off one tax plan after another like duckpins without passing any one of them has not helped matters one whit, and in fact if anything, this fiscal bowling game has only served to pinpoint to the folks at home the flop-flooding sessioning that has been going on this past year.

Things just aren't good for the noble lawmaking brethren as they set out for a sail on the rough waters ahead. Even if they do gain enough signatures on their nominating petitions—including those stealthily gained from dusty tombstones—they have the fight of their life coming up during the primary and general election campaigns.

There are some sad-eyed lads in Harrisburg this week as they gloom ahead to the campaign wars just over the hill. There undoubtedly will be some fatalities among incumbents—caused no less by their self-inflicted legislative wounds of the past year.

Sixth Grade Girls Given "Play Day"

Girls of the sixth grades of Mount Joy, Marietta and Maytown elementary schools took part in a "Play Day" in the local school last Friday. Sponsored jointly by the schools, the day was planned in order that the girls may learn to know each other prior to becoming in the same class at the Donegal High School.

The day was spent in playing volley ball, basketball, relay races and cheering. Two sixth grade Mothers from each of the schools treated the group at the end of the afternoon.

Two additional days are planned for the girls; tentatively, they are March 2 and March 9.
