Little Fellows Are Close Observers

Little fellows do the things they see their fathers do. This trait or habit of imitating Daddy leads to many amusing incidents and situations that provide treasured memories.

Little fellows take to attending church and Sunday School like a duck takes to water, especially when their fathers go with them. As they grow older they continue to attend, until it becomes a part of their lives and they learn to derive comfort and help from it. It is a rich experience that father and children can share and enjoy together. If Little Fellows see their fathers going to church they will want to go too and it is not likely to become something "we have to do," but always something we "may do."

With the aim of fostering that which is good in family and community spirit this message is contributed to the religious life of the Community by the following:
