

OWL LAFFS

BY A WISE OWL

Here's a good thought, especially with vacation coming up:
"Live within your income and you'll live without worry—and a lot of other things."

"Fluss" Herr, local fisherman, was telling the fellows at Wittle's Beer Parlor about the big ones he caught over the weekend. But when his skeptical acquaintances thinly veiled hints that he was lying, the next day he bought a pair of scales and installed them in his home. He said from now on he'd make his friends watch while he actually weighed the fish. - - - Last night a neighbor burst in to his home and excitedly sought permission to borrow the scales. He was back in ten minutes, his face flushed with delight. "Congratulations, 'Fluss' he cried. 'I am the father of a thirty-nine pound baby boy.'"

On the way to Hershey Sunday, I overheard the bus driver ask a woman if all the children with her were hers, or if was a picnic. The lady quickly replied: "They're all mine, and believe me, it's no picnic!"

In a poker game Friday night, a local henpecked husband turned out to be the only winner. He didn't like to quit when he was so far ahead, but as the hours went by, he grew visibly more apprehensive. Suddenly at about 3:00 a. m. he had an inspiration. - - - He called his wife on the phone and when she answered, he cried to her, "Don't pay the ransom, darling, I've escaped."

When a man has a rip in his coat and only two buttons on his vest - - - it's a sure sign he should do one of two things - - - either get married or get divorced.

A newly married Florin girl was determined to prove to her husband what an accomplished cook she was, and on the first day at housekeeping, set about cooking a chicken for his dinner. She plucked the fowl carefully, arranged it neatly in a pot, and put it in the oven.

Two hours later she heard a loud banging on the oven door. Investigation proved that the disturbance was being made by the chicken. "Lady," it cried pitiously, either give me back my feathers or turn on the gas. I'm freezing to death in this oven."

A local West Main Street housewife who devoted most of her life to spending twice as much as her husband earned complained constantly about the apartment they lived in. "All our friends live ten times better than we do," was his chorus. "We simply must move into a more expensive neighborhood."
"Monday night her long suffering spouse came home and told her, "Well, we want to move after all. The landlord just doubled our rent."

Two firemen were discussing the costs of higher education.
"You've been paying your son's college expenses for 2 years now, Bill. Tell me, is education more expensive nowadays?"
"Language runs the highest," the father explained. "Last month it was $10 for English, $20 for French and $110 for Scotch."

Fresh Air Children Need Homes

It's time to change scenes for a New York City child trapped by tall buildings and stifling heat. Persons in the local area may invite one of these children to their homes in the community. Interested persons are asked to call Mount Joy 3-4333 or 3-6195 for more information.
Children will arrive in Mt. Joy for two week periods. The first period will be from July 6 to July 20 and the second from August 3 to August 17. All children will return to the city at the latest, August 30.

This Friendly Town plan of the Herald Tribune Fresh Air Fund urges persons in small towns to invite a child to visit them for two weeks during the next two months. Thousands of children of all races and creeds are awaiting word whether this summer they will have the chance to see what "the country" is like.
According to the Friendly Town statistics for the summer of 1955, Lancaster Co. invited 1,024 children into their homes last year. Chester County ranked third in the list.

If Worker Dies Check On Social Security Status

If a worker in your family dies, ask if survivors benefits are payable. M. S. Gleaton, district manager of the Lancaster social security district office states that each year there are some benefits that are not claimed by the survivors of insured workers. This is particularly true when the deceased worker is a female or when a male worker is not survived by a widow or close relative.
The Social Security Act provides that a lump-sum death payment can be made in every case if the worker was insured at the time of his death. An application for this payment must be filed within two years after the wage earner's death.

The lump-sum death payment is paid to the worker's surviving spouse, provided they were living together at the time of the worker's death. If there is no surviving spouse, then it is payable as reimbursement to the person or persons that paid the deceased worker's burial expenses.
In addition to the lump-sum death payment, monthly benefits may be payable to the deceased wage earner's children under 18 years of age; and to his widow, regardless of her age, if she has minor children of the wage earner in her care. When the last child reaches age 18, if the widow is still under 65 years of age, her age 65.

Gleaton explained that social security benefits are not automatic. Applications must be filed for all types of benefits. He urges that in the event of the death of a worker, soon afterwards someone should contact the nearest social security office and find out whether survivors benefits are payable.

benefits is stopped—to be resumed when she becomes 65, provided she has not remarried. Under some conditions, monthly payments are possible to dependent widowers, at age 65.
In cases where the wage earner leaves no minor children and no surviving spouse if he was contributing as much as fifty percent of the support of his parents, monthly benefits may be payable to them when they reach
