"You silly boy," the gal said, a little flattered, "just because I won't marry you doesn't mean that other gals will do the same." "Shore it does," Zeke said. "If you won't have me, wig wagg!" * * * Out West, it's the season for logging shows—sometimes called "loggers' jubilees, Loggerodeos or Timberfests. They're a fine way of pointing up a major industry—and lots of fun. One such show is held in Darrington, Washington, in the foothills of the Cascades. It features parades, dances, horse events, and lots of contests—in hand-falling trees, power sawing, nail driving, log bucking, log rolling, tree climbing, and so on. That reminds me, folks. The company that makes power chain saws, McCulloch Motors Corp., is celebrating its tenth anniversary right now. Those fellows are also happy 'cause they've just manufactured their 500,000th engine product. That's a lot of saws! * * * Last fall, Joe Moon tells me, they had one whale of a fire out in California's High Sierra. For two weeks, a thousand men fought the blaze, which jumped around the mountains near Sequoia National Forest, killing wildlife and destroying countless giant redwoods and ponderosa pines. It was finally cornered on the cliffs of Kings Canyon and put out with the help of rain—but only after it had burned 17,000 acres. Replanting began immediately, but it'll take five generations to make the forest as beautiful as it was before. * * * I guess everybody knows, by this time, that tree farming means growing trees as a crop. Wood lots must be properly managed to produce top-quality lumber—but they're easier to take care of than most other crops, and they can be harvested any time of the year! They're a good investment, too—'cause a well-managed woodland will provide steady income! And the future is bright: In the next 20 years, the experts say, the consumption of wood pulp alone may increase 100 per cent! Reckon that's why more and more fellers go into tree farming every year!
