NURSE SHORTAGE STILL IS SERIOUS
 Despite the combined efforts of many leading authorities to attempt to alleviate a severe and critical situation, reliable sources report that an even greater shortage still exists in training nursing personnel.

The ever-increasing demand for nurses in hospitals, clinics, convalescent homes, institutions, doctors' offices and private homes has placed a heavy strain upon the present supply of nurses. Today, thousands of nurses are wanted and trained Practical Nurses are helping to fill this need.

Women of all ages, 17 to 60, can become Practical Nurses in a matter of a few months thru the training program of the Philadelphia School of Practical Nursing, approved and licensed by the Commonwealth of Pennsylvania. This spare time "home study" training does not interfere with present job or household duties. No high school education is required. Age is no barrier—maturity is off-times an asset.

Women can learn how to qualify for this high paying career and service to the community by sending for a free booklet on "How to Become a Practical Nurse" to the Philadelphia School of Practical Nursing, 1704 North Broad St., Philadelphia 21, Penna.
