prized possessions of antique collectors.

Many of his coverlids were woven without name or date, according to the wishes of the customer. Many times the owner's name and some date of his choice were woven into the corner. Locally the base color was usually red but occasionally blue and sometimes green.

The business or trade of such weaving was quite an honorable and distinguished occupation. The cost of the product was relatively very high, and the possession of a coverlid was one of the marks of distinction of a family.

Jay Eicherly is a man who enjoys life, appreciates a good joke and has staunch friends. Yet, almost all of those things fell apart—momentarily—one day last week.

It all started some time ago when he bought for his business a panel truck which had been used as a service vehicle by Simon Nissley. Jay's friends frequently have reminded him of the grim part of life for which the truck was once used and kidded him about spooks, spirits, etc. Apparently he listened more than he himself knew.

One day he had made a delivery to a customer in the country. He got back into the truck. But as he dropped his elbow down along the seat, he felt something moving, pushing and wiggling. His instant reaction befuddled him as he jumped from the truck, almost leaving his shoes behind.

"Safely" on the outside, he calmed himself and looked cautiously back inside. There it was—the cutest little puppy dog you ever saw, which had climbed inside the truck and wanted only to be friendly.

We would be remiss to fail to point out that this is National Newspaper Week. About next year we're going to sweep out the place real good, dust down through the middle and invite the general public in to see how their home town paper is printed.

Actually, anyone is invited at any time. The Mount Joy Bulletin is not as big or as pretentious as the Philadelphia Bulletin but probably a lot of people would be surprised and interested to see how much machinery it actually takes to print a weekly publication.

If you'd like to see the Bulletin actually being printed, stop in about 3:30 or 4 o'clock any Thursday afternoon.

With all the stories about Christmas in the summer—for various reasons—the invitation received this week is more timely than it might appear at first glance. The pre-Halloween announcement points out that Santa Claus, his helpers and animals will be at Santaland, Wanamakers, Pa. each Saturday and Sunday, from now until Christmas.

ART EXHIBIT AT UNION NATIONAL BANK
The Officers of The Union National Mount Joy Bank announce that a public art exhibit will be held in the bank in November. Cash prizes will be awarded for all prize winning entries. Further details will be announced later.

The word your newspaper sets every time it sets type

Here's that word as it looks to the typesetters. Hold it up before a handy mirror and you'll find it spells FREEDOM.

Every time your local newspaper tells a story or expresses an idea, it spells out this word, FREEDOM. For here in America our newspapers have that rare privilege of freely and openly reporting on the parade of human events. They also have the even rarer privilege of freedom to editorialize on those events. They can scourge the wrong and crusade for the right! They can humble the arrogant and raise the weak! They can kindle the public's ire or allay the public's fears! They can inform! educate! elucidate! entertain! It can be done with scathing irony, with sparkling wit, in stately prose or lilting verse . . . tempered only with responsibility, and flavored with an interest in a better community and a stronger nation.

The only censure of the press in our land is a self-imposed censorship . . . as each newspaper interprets for itself what is in good taste and in the public benefit.

We owe much to our newspapers, large and small, for their part in preserving this freedom of theirs, which is a part of the fundamental American freedom of speech . . . and without which our other freedoms can hardly exist. We proudly take this occasion of National Newspaper Week to salute not only this newspaper but the entire American press.
