SIGN WITH CAUTION When the salesman at your door says, "You'll need to sign at once to get this special price," take time to check prices with local dealers who handle the same or similar items, advises Sanna Black, Penn State home management extension specialist. All special offers that come by phone, letter, and from door-to-door salesmen may not be gimmicks, but be wary of the "hurry up and sign" kind.

Want To Live Independently

People aged 65 or older want to continue living independently in their own homes, alone if necessary rather than move in with son or daughter. That's the conclusion from a survey of 487 adults in a rural community, as reported by the College of Home Ecby the College of Home Economics at the Pennsylvania State University.

Living in a home for the aged is looked upon most often as a second-choice arrangement, says Joseph H. Britton, professor of child development and family relations at Penn State.

"Older people have strong feeling for self-sufficiency and independence, as shown by the interviews," Dr. Britton points out. "Near ly half of the people interviewed believed a person should work as long as he is physically able. More women than men are against retirement," he adds.

POSTURE POINTERS

Poor posture is the cause of household fatigue more often than the job itself, reminds Helen Beil, Penn State home management extension specialist. Some aids to reduce fatigue are: Use the large hip and leg muscles for lifting from low areas and use a squatting position for low work. Hold any object you lift close to your body. Divide the load you are carrying by putting half in each arm if possible.

Food has three big jobs, says Mrs. LaRue Hefner, Penn State extension nutri-tionist. Food provides matertionist. Food provides materials for the body's building and repair, regulators that enable the body to use other materials and to run smoothly and fuel for the body's en-ergy and warmth. There is some fuel in every food.
