limited just to a Sunday in June. It should be 365 days in the year. But so should Son's Day for Johnny.

A good father must pay a certain price in time and energy, training his kids. However, it is only for a few years because after the age of 12, they usually shift to their pals.
 But until 12, teach them to swim and to ride a bicycle his own home.

 If that were medically impossible, then encourage him to bring playmates home. And teach him to be reasonably proficient with ball and bat and other kid games.
 If you Dads launch adequately in their social and athletic careers, they will not need your participation so much when they get to Boy Scout age. But if you fail your youngsters, they will probably be athletic wall-flowers all through high school.

Golden Calf
 And never worship a Golden Calf! Don't spoil your home life by excessive concern over $$$$.

If you are an average American worker, you already have almost everything a millionaire enjoys, and I'm not joking.

You eat 3 meals per day, but that's all he craves.

You wear only one suit or one pair of shoes at a time, and he can do no more.

Both of you read this newspaper, and eat bread from the same bakery. You drink the same pasteurized milk. You get your water from the same city supply.

You travel in an auto and so does he. Maybe he spends more for his, but it doesn't go any faster or any more safely.

So why destroy your home-life and alienate your children by madly worshipping a Golden Calf?

True, the millionaire isn't forced to get up and go to work each week day. But most millionaires do. And work is the best health insurance we have, so actually you are better off by needing to work each day.
