be describing as "maple" a captain's chair made of birch; using the term "soild mahogany" or "mahogany" or "mahogany" to describe a mahogany-veneered table; describing a walnut - stained hackberry chair as "Danish-style walnut"; or describing any nonlumber product such as hardboard, fiberboard, metal, plastic, etc., as wood. (The term, "mahogany-grained hardboard," to describe a simulated finish on a wood imitation would be accurate, however.)

Ads may not contain half-truths tending to mislead. For example, a manufacturer must not describe as "maple" a table that consists of maple top with pecan legs; he must use the more accurate label "maple top — pecan legs." Similarly, even a true mahogany veneer but with a finish printed to resemble crotch mahogany must reveal this bit of imitation.

The word "walnut" can refer only to woods of the genus Juglans and the word

"mahogany" only to woods of the genus Swietenia. Philippine mahogany and African mahogany refer to woods from different trees, but both are legal designations.

But even when the new labels become universal, the magazine points out, it will still be up o the buyer to understand what he is reading — and the wise consumer will study the vocabulary before he goes shopping.
