Spacemakers
Save Storage

If you live in a temporary home and don't want to attach permanent storage units or shelves to walls, temporary or rented storage facilities may be one solution to your problem. Such spacemakers can help to make your living more comfortable, too, points out Helen E. Bell, extension home management specialist, The Pennsylvania State University.

Decide first what you need to store, then think where you can fit storage into your home. You may be able to use storage units in the same or different ways when you move to a permanent home. You might store baking equipment or school books and papers in a two-drawer

You might consider renting temporary storage, says Miss Bell. Many drycleaners now have storage boxes you could rent for storing out-of-season clothing.

Bookcases can provide shelf storage in many ways and locations. You can use either finished or unfinished cases on the floor, next to a wall, or under a window. Also, you may set them on another piece of furniture or equipment or fit them into a closet.

Don't put a lot of money into temporary storage, Miss Bell advises. An inexpensive fiberboard chest may give you the storage needed and add design interest to the home.

Where's Mom?

She's Working

Time was when home-coming husbands and shavers emancipated from school could count on finding Mom in the kitchen, busily making one of her famous apple pies, or muttering crossly to herself as she scrubbed away at the grass-stained spots on junior's dungarees.

Then we began to hear that Mom had turned into a chauffeur, clashing fenders with all the other ladies of the town as she drove recklessly about on a ceaseless round of errand, bridge parties, committee-meetings, and trips to the orthodontist.

Both examples of Mom are currently visible in the television commercials, where she gets instruction on the operation of her washing machine from picturesque repairmen; chooses interior styling for the car she is going to scratch up in 1964; or debates the merits of soap powders, boats, various brands of coffee, and some other items not mentionable in a family magazine (though (Turn to page 8)

Spotlight on Teacher

American Education Week, November 10-16 salutes our teachers for the excellent job they are doing in molding the industrial, government and spiritual leaders of the future.

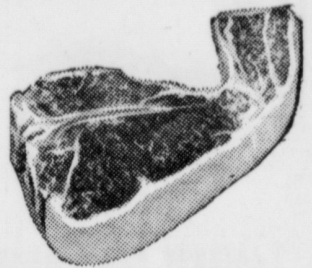

America's teachers are facing a greater responsibility than ever before. This year 51.5 million students are attending U. S. private and public schools and colleges. The teacher must absorb and pass on to these students the newest discoveries of a fast-changing society.

Today's creative teacher stimulates her students with "living" subject matter projected on a classroom screen. She can focus class attention on news events by making instant transparencies of newspaper clippings and projecting them with an overhead projector. Most important, she can tailor her presentation to the interests of the class, using the latest information and new approaches to teaching any subject.

Many companies are taking a more active interest in encouraging creative teaching. The 3M Company, St. Paul, Minnesota, for example, this fall established a $1.5 million assistance grant to education program which will give $3,000 worth of this visual communications equipment to 500 schools throughout the country. Schools in every state will receive these grants in December.
