Will You Be A Valentine?

More than 400,000,000 Valentine cards will be sent this year. And children will be sending most of them!

There's a message in St. Valentine's Day that youngsters automatically react to—the message of love. Dan Cupid himself was a little boy—the son of Venus, Roman goddess of love. He represents the innocence of love, as did the ancient Bishop of Spoleto, St. Valentine.

The good Bishop was put to death for teaching that people should practice brotherly love. He sent the first "Valentine Card" while in prison—to the jailer's lovely daughter. His message was signed, simply, "From your Valentine."

Affairs of the heart were first settled on Valentine's Day in ancient Rome, when young lovers drew names from an urn to give Dan Cupid a helping hand.

Valentine's Day was officially recognized by Chaucer in his "Parliament of Fowls" and by Shakespeare who had Ophelia sing:

"Good morning, 'tis St. Valentine's Day
All in the morn betime,
And I a maid at your window
To be your Valentine."

The original Valentine cards were homemade of frilly lace and pretty pictures. Often, a lovesick sender would purchase an appropriate verse from some desperate poet. And in 1797, "The Young Man's Valentine Writer" was published with suitable sayings for young hopefuls of every walk of life.

The village bricklayer, for instance, could promise his love the following:

"With mortar and trowel
You know I do no ill,
But a mansion can raise
very high.
Then, sweet Valentine,

If you will be mine
You shall have a fine house by the by."
The Valentine has gone through a number of stages since then. We've had the lace card of Queen Victoria's time, for instance, and the "mean" Valentine of more recent years. We've even seen the advent of special Valentines for occasions like Leap Year. And through the changes, the most faithful Valentine fans have ever been the
