should be giving a lot of thought to trying to reduce their production costs. In southeastern Pennsylvania one of the recommended methods of producing cheaper beef is to utilize corn silage for a greater part of the feeding period. Feeders who are planning to follow this endeavor should be making plans for greater corn acreage and for proper silage storage facilities. With the great corn producing ability of most Lancaster County farms the providing of ample corn silage for cattle feeding may be obtained with good farm planning. Don't overlook corn silage for being able to produce a maximum amount of beef per acre.

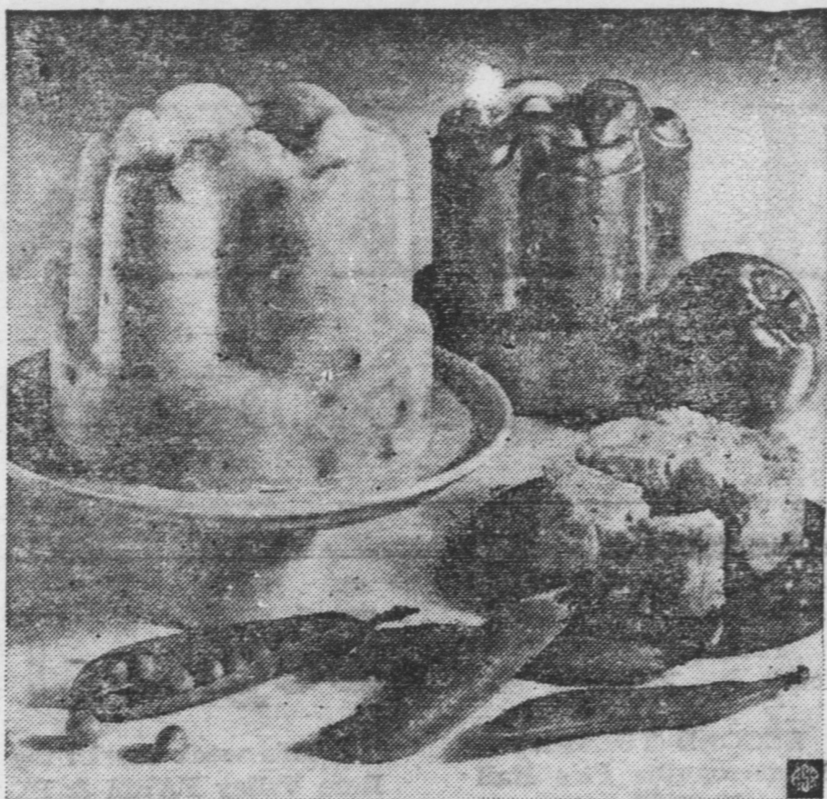

THE PRACTICE of rotation fertilization is one worthy of more attention on many farms. Several decades ago the practice was to apply fertilizer only to the cash or the row crops; the hay fields and pastures did not get this recognition. Under modern farming methods it is equally important to fertilize the hay fields and the pastures, if top yields are expected. In many cases the sod crops will return just as good as cash crops per dollar invested in fertilizer. Early spring is an excellent time to fertilize pastures; the carrying capacity for livestock will be increased. Hay fields may be fertilized early spring, after the first cutting, or early fall. Grassland fertilization pays.

NATION'S FOOD SUPPLY

In case of a national emergency, almost half of the people have enough food stored at home to feed the family for 14 or more days, according to a U. S. Department of Agriculture survey. The study also shows that retail stores have food on hand to last the public about 14 and a half days and wholesale warehouses have stocks for about 16 days. The Department is now finding out the size of food supplies in restaurants and other away-from-home eating places.

which was begun in 1944 at Selingsgrove by Lottie Kemberling and her son, Jesse. The organization stretches into Florida with new openings scheduled throughout the coming summer. A new frozen food line, to be known as the Lottie K soon will be seen in retail outlets.

Permanent manager here will be Dane E. Leister, formerly manager of the Erie Airport Dutch Pantry.

Two local area men who are part of the organization are Bob Singer, of Elizabethtown, purchasing agent, and Paul Meckley, assistant vice-president.

Among the improvements made at the restaurant is a complete renovation of the interior. Specially designed Distelfink draperies adorn the dining room windows, planters divide booths for privacy and teak colored Early American chairs surround new formica top tables.
