SECOND HELPING

A waitress acquaintance of ours tells us that professors have no corner on absent-mindedness. This young lady works in a restaurant in the financial district, where each day she gives the bulls and bears their lunches. The other day one of her regular customers came in, sat down, and ordered the usual—the ready-to-serve plate. Recalling that she had served him not an hour ago, she asked, "Haven't you had lunch already today?"

"Why, so I have," said the financier delightedly, and walked out. —Selected

"We Insure Everything Except the ground you walk on—That we sell"

The outside of lunch boxes need just as thorough a washing as the inside, remind Penn State extension home economics specialists. Remember how much soil they can collect going to and from school or work. Lunch boxes pick up soil from the car or bus floor, in the locker, on the ground, and from grimy hands or clothes.
