Sees Education
With Leisure

Increased leisure time, with the average work week falling to 36 hours by the year 1976, will challenge adult education to develop new educational forms departing from traditional classrooms and meetings, a rural sociologist at The Pennsylvania State University says.

James H. Copp said adult education can be used to gain new experiences and new avenues for excelling and will become increasingly vital in future years. He addressed a conference dealing with tourism, recreation and parks, sponsored by the Pennsylvania Society of Newspaper Editors and the Pennsylvania Newspaper Publishers' Association.

Dr. Copp called attention to the importance of adult education by saying he feared (Turn to page 10)
