Exhaust System Proves Valuable

To prevent a hot, humid kitchen, the most dependable year-round ventilation is the mechanized type, points out Helen E. Bell, extension home management specialist, Penna. State University.

To remove hot, moist air from sink, dishwasher, range and dining areas, install a multiple-switch controlled forced exhaust system. This will take out cooking odors, smoke, and grease particles. A fan with a capacity higher than is needed to change the air in your kitchen every 3 minutes is the most effective, Miss Bell explains.

Exhaust equipment can be mounted in the ceiling, in the wall, in cabinets, and in range hoods. A hood exhaust costs about 50 percent more than other types. If you have a large kitchen, you could use both a ceiling and a hood exhaust. Keep the duct run to the outside as straight as possible and less than 10 ft. Do not vent the exhaust to the attic, cautions Miss Bell. Grease particles will make it a fire hazard and will be food for insects.

If you decide on a range hood, install it so the lower edge is in line with the top of your head, she advises. This allows you to see what you are cooking without ducking. If you install a range hood in an island or peninsula, be sure it is high enough not to interfere with your view. This also makes it easier to clean the hood and filters and to replace the light bulbs.

Nonduct hood fans are designed to clean circulated air and remove odors. They do not remove heat and moisture, Miss Bell adds.

SHOWER CONTROL

There are three types of water controls for showers. Most desirable is the thermostatically controlled mixing valve which provides water at any desired temperature and protects against danger from violent fluctuations in water pressure. A regular mixture valve works on the same principle as the single-lever faucet, and tempers water. Finally there is the regular two-valve system where the bather tempers the water himself.

A good companion is somebody who suits your mood, and says and things as you do, male or female.

PENNA. CUT FLOWERS PRODUCTION IS HIGH

Pennsylvania ranks third in the nation as a cut flower and potted plant producer. Alvi Voigt, extension economist at Penn State University, says that ornamental nursery stock production has almost tripled in recent years. Pennsylvania may become third in nursery stock production also.
