

MISS TEEN AGER

... answers questions about Junior Miss etiquette, grooming and interests.

Q. I'm having nightmares that my date for the prom will give me flowers that won't go with my dress. Would it be all right for me to have a girl friend circulate the word about what kind of flowers I want?

A. If you did that, your date might get the idea that you're more interested in his flowers than his company. A more graceful way to assure a clashless corsage would be to let him know what color you'll be wearing. Next time you're talking about the prom, mention that you're wearing your blue formal, or that you've bought a new dress and you hope he likes yellow. He'll probably remember this when he goes to the florist. But if he doesn't, don't panic. Just pin the flowers to your evening bag, and tell him you don't want to risk crushing them by wearing them on your shoulder. Incidentally, this often is good fashion, because flowers may detract from the cut of a dress.

Q. What can you say when someone makes an introduction without telling you anything about the person? Is there some kind of pattern for making conversation?

A. Granted, it isn't very helpful of a hostess to simply announce, "This is Mary Mystery" and walk away. But you can make conversation by asking for the information she neglected to give you. Ask Mary if she's new in town, where she goes to school, and if she's the hostess' long lost cousin. Remember, "Twenty Questions" can be fun.

Q. I'm a very pale blond and my eyebrows are almost invisible, but my mother says I'm too young to wear makeup. Without any eyebrow pencil at all, my forehead looks bare as an egg.

A. Your mother probably is afraid you'll paint on heavy, grotesque looking eyebrows. Perhaps if she sees what a natural look you can achieve, she'll relent—if only for parties. Try a light brown pencil and use short, feathery strokes. Above all, stay on your natural eyebrow line. Practice in private until you have a result only a shade darker than your own blond brows. Then ask your mother if she'll approve this look. Maybe she'll okay it. But if not, take the answer gracefully and try again after that 14th birthday.

GUIDES TO QUALITY PLUMS

Color alone is no indication of the ripeness of plums, reminds Harold Neigh, Penn State extension consumer specialist. Some plum varieties are fully ripe when the color is yellow-green; others when the color is red, purplish blue, or black. Good quality plums are plump, clean, of fresh appearance, full-colored for the variety, and soft enough to yield to slight pressure. Softening at the tip is a good indication of maturity. Immature fruit is hard.
