Worry Clinic

(From page 11)
"that thou hast done?"
Eve was a very smart woman.

She saw that Adam had escaped censure by thus blaming his wife. In psychology we call Adam's strategy "projection" or buck-passing.

So Eve decided to adopt Adam's technique, too, as indicated in the following Biblical quotation:

"The serpent beguiled me, and I did eat."

The poor serpent apparently couldn't pass the buck on downward so he became the "goat."

Which illustrates a similar trait of mankind that has persisted to this day.

For there was an old Army adage that when the sergeant bawls out the corporal, then the corporal yells at the private, who finally kicks the mule.

Although Matthew wasn't even four years old, he spontaneously discovered Adam's strategy of buck-passing.

I offer this recent case not only to show how clever young children become at utilizing Applied Psychology.

But also to indicate the admirable habit that Judy employs in reading Bible stories to her children every night at bedtime.

Mothers, how many of you read ANY stories to your children at bedtime?

And what kind of stories do you employ?

The time to encourage a LIKING for morality and good literature, as well as good music, is before your youngsters enter grammar school.

Better let the dinner dishes slide, if you haven't time to do both, and nurture your children's minds with Bible stories at bedtime.

Such mothers also give their youngsters a running head start for college!

Send for my booklet "How to Tutor Your Child at Home", enclosing a long stamped, return envelope plus 20c.

(Always write to Dr. Crane in care of this newspaper, enclosing a long stamped addressed envelope and 20c to cover typing and printing costs when you send for one of his booklets.)

Business men are learning that people buy according to their degree of optimism and not according to their cash on hand.
