that, old and quaint as they were, the cars were still much too 'young' to belong rightfully to the era being brought back to life at Landis Valley Sunday afternoon.

Our Libby, like all the other children there, found much to interest her. She came back to the trailer once with a sack of taffy she had watched the women pull. Another time she had a shingle she had seen the men cut. And yet another time, with justifiable pride, she carried a huge pumpkin which one of the exhibitors gave her at the close of the day's program.

We who live in Lancaster county are so 'lucky!' Where else could the Landis Valley 'festival' be seen two or three times each year? Where else could one live surrounded by the beautiful rolling countryside, with its fertile farms, huge barns and beautiful old country homes? Where else could one have all that, and yet be only three hours from New York City, two and one-half hours from Washington, D.C., an hour and a half from Philadelphia and three hours from Atlantic City?

Our blessings are many.

As we strolled around Sunday afternoon, we saw a goodly number of people from Mount Joy, Mr. and Mrs. Ken Gainer and sons were there, with a special interest in the calliope, the steam engines, and the shingle saw, as Mrs. Gainer's cousins, the Getz brothers, own and exhibit them. Mrs. Ethel Herr, in costume, was presiding in the replica of her father's veterinarian office.

We also saw Mr. and Mrs. Clarence West, the William Gassman family of Blossom Hill, Lancaster, formerly of Mount Joy, the Joseph Shaefers, Mr. and Mrs. Lester Eshelman and twins, Dawn and Denise.

Emerson, in his essay on 'Compensation,' says that for every thing which we gain, we lose something, that everything has its 'price'.

As we watched the activities of a past day being reenacted before our eyes Sunday afternoon at Landis Valley, it wasn't hard to understand.

The trip was made possible through the proceeds of hoagie sales sponsored throughout the year. Highlight of the trip was the placing of the wreath on President Kennedy's grave.
