Shenks Home From Africa

Rev. and Mrs. Jacob Shenk who have completed their first tour of service in Africa returned home by plane recently and are now living in the area on Manheim R4.

They have been at Matopo Mission, located on the edge of the famed Matopo Hills of scenic and historic fame. They were there from 1953 until this past month.

Rev. Shenk's first assignment was that of science master in the Matopo Secondary school. Mrs. Shenk taught music and helped with other mission duties.

While carrying on their teaching duties, they were in charge of the church work in the Bulwayo African locations for a year.

'Each Sunday we left Matopo early in the morning and returned late in the evening after conducting three to five services. This was sometimes tiring but always rewarding, Rev. Shenk says.

their term in Africa, they served as superintendent and matron of Matopo Mission—a demanding task and one which brought them into close touch with the varied facets of African life and character.

MISS TEEN AGER

... answers questions about Junior Miss etiquette, grooming and interests.

Q. At our last school dance I got stuck with a real sad Sam. I was miserable. My girl friends say I should have said no when he asked me to dance. Would I have been wrong to refuse?

A. It is perfectly proper to refuse if you don't care for the boy, but be as polite as possible. If you should get stuck again, you may suggest leaving the dance floor, under the pretext that there are too many couples dancing or that joining the gang at the refreshment table might be more fun. Make it clear to him that you're refusing the dance, not the boy.

Q. My boy friend got a sports car for his birthday and every time we go for a ride he gets speed-happy. How can I let him know that I'm afraid every ride will be my last if he doesn't slow down? I don't want him to think I'm chicken.

A. Better a live chick than a dead duck. Driving above the regulation speed limit is a serious and dangerous matter. Don't be embarrassed to ask him to slow down. He should respect your feelings (and the law). If he doesn't, insist that he let you out close to other transportation. You can always find another boy friend with a sports car, but you have only one life.

Q. The best looking boy in my class has invited me to a school party, but I don't know if I should accept. If I wear heels I'm two inches taller than he is.

A. What if he isn't tall? You said yourself he is the best looking boy in class. Come down to earth and swap your high heels for the medium kind. They're better fashion this fall anyway. Just remember to be poised and proud. Stooping doesn't make you any shorter, only less attractive. Besides, most fashion models are on the tall side.

Publishers of books edit the manuscripts for bad grammar; why don't the publishers of popular songs do this for the lyrics?
