Marietta May Lose Best C.D. Shelter

An underground beer cellar, now the better of Marietta's two Civil Defense shelters, may be sold to a private concern in the near future, the borough council was told recently.

If it is sold, the borough will have to give up the shelter and find a substitute if it wishes to maintain its progressive Civil Defense standards.

The cellar-shelter is located at 243 East Market Street. The owner, Mrs. Anthony

B. Sahn, 240 Walnut St., Columbia, has also offered to sell the beer cellar to the borough, but the borough council has indicated it would rather find another rent-free shelter somewhere in Marietta.

Under Civil Defense authority, the borough has been using the deep beer cellar rent-free. The owner can sell it after giving council 90 days notice.

However, because of its depth, the beer cellar is probably the best type of shelter from atomic fallout, explained Marietta's Civil Defense director, retired businessman John Schock.

In fact, the beer cellar is rated much better than the other Marietta shelter, in the Municipal building basement, Schock said. The beer cellar can accommodate 90 people and the Municipal basement, 87.

Marietta has the only such survival unit in Lancaster County, Schock said.

Police Chief

The position of police chief of Marietta has been offered to a Lewistown man, a former member of the Lewistown police department with nine years of police experience.

Rhoads would succeed Anthony Discavage, 29 N. Broad St., Lancaster, who will resign for another position. Discavage has been chief for slightly more than one year, Portner said.

Injured In Highway Crash

Roy B. Kaylor, 62, Elizabethtown Route 1, a custodian at Donegal District's Grand View school, was critically injured last week.

For several days he was in the intensive care ward at St. Joseph's hospital, but is improved enough to be removed from that section early this week.

He suffered injuries early Thursday morning, Dec. 10, when his pickup truck was rammed about 5:45 o'clock on Route 230.

He was traveling eastward less than a mile west of the Florin ward when he was hit from behind by a semitrailer driven by Douglas LeRoy Flood, 40, Wheatland, Pa. The Kaylor truck was driven off the highway, across a strip of railroad right of way, knocked down a railroad telephone pole and onto the westbound (north) tracks of the Pennsylvania main line.
