Mount Joy, Pa.

Main street, Mount Joy has lost three businesses within the past few weeks.

Ordinarily business closings are not top billing in the news but the fact that there are several within a short time is worthy of mention.

Wolf Ford Sales and Service, successor to Clarence Herr, virtually closed its doors several weeks ago but on January 1 discontinued business altogether, consolidating the operation in Mount Joy with its Lancaster business.

John Way closed his Main street store January 1.

Last Saturday was the final day for the Mount Joy A & P store.

Hearings to acquaint the general public with plans for the construction of the Route 230 Bypass around Mount Joy and Elizabethtown are now anticipated sometime next month.

A "briefing" session for selected local officials by the state people was scheduled for Wednesday night of this week.

As now planned, Mount Joy will have two interchanges—one east of the borough and another northwest on the Cedar tree road about a mile north of Present Route 230.

Elizabethtown will have only one access to the new construction. That, at present, seems to be part of the problem.

What Mount Joy should have next summer is a flea market!

It's a rather small thing but a recent routine maintenance by the Pennsylvania Railroad has eliminated a very serious traffic hazard.

At the intersection of Henry and south Market street a hedge grows at the southeast corner. Every couple of years the hedge gets so high and so thick that motorists approaching from the east along Henry street can not see other cars come north on Market over the bridge until there is danger of a collision.

The Mount Joy Library Center has received its first memorial book. This week a check was received with instructions to buy a suitable book in memory of C. Raymond Gilbert.

'Of This and That'

by the editor's wife

Is January the month of "winter doldrums" for you?

Does life seem suddenly dull and uninteresting, and you begin to count the days until spring activities can be started?

If that's the way January seems to you, stale and uninviting, here are a few suggestions for putting zest back into life! Take your choice—one or two probably would be sufficient to give you a completely fresh outlook on the world!

Have the winter tv programs all begun to look alike? Don't turn the set on at all for a whole week—and in the interim, read "from cover to cover" the January issues of all the magazines to which you subscribe!

Have you cooked and baked all your favorite recipes, and still find yourself with a "winter jaded" appetite? Break your pattern of grocery shopping—go to a different store, just for a change—and you'll get new ideas for meal planning and cooking. Or, call a friend and say, "What are you fixing for dinner tonight?" And whatever she says, cook the same thing, regardless!

Have you read every magazine and book in the house? Then spend a couple of afternoons this week at the Mt. Joy Library, browsing among the many fascinating books and periodicals there.

Do your clothes all have a much "too familiar" look about them? Go on a shopping spree, even if it's only for material for a demin jumper, a new pair of nylons, or maybe a pair of fresh white gloves!

Does the house look somewhat "beat" after all the holiday activity? (It isn't dirty, you KNOW, for it got a good pre-Christmas cleaning.) But it looks forlorn, just the same, with the Christmas tree gone and the decorations all packed away. Wash the throw rugs, polish the windows, wax a few of the bigger pieces of furniture. And lo! The doldrums are gone!

Pamper yourself a bit. Feed your hobby, whatever it is! If it's music, buy a new album for the hi-fi; if it's sewing, make something PRETTIER than it is PRACTICAL: if it's painting, get a new canvas board and put a January snow scene on it—or even better, paint from memory the roses of June! If it's woodworking, "antiquing", reading, collecting stamps or coins, building model cars, boats or miniature railroads—whatever your interest, indulge yourself by giving your hobby a little extra time.

Or, if you have been pampering yourself right along, (Turn to page 2)

Just Too Much Beaston!

Too much Beaston!

That is the complete story of how Donegal high's undefeated record went down the drain Tuesday night at Columbia.

One could not rightfully say that Columbia defeated the Indians. One more correctly would be obliged to say that big Chip Beaston was the responsible character.

He blasted the nets for a huge 36-point total, pushing 'em through with such regularity and at psychological times to crush the Tribe. On defense, he had things his own way holding Donegal's

John Brown to a disappointing 12 points.

Not only did Chip turn out to be a giant Tuesday in offensive and defensive action. He was a spark which jumped the Tide into an early and undeniable victory.

The final count was 79 to 42.

Rice topped the Donegal scoring with 13 points.

The Indians now show 9 and 1 for the season with 5-1 in league play.

Friday night the Tribe plays host to Manheim Twp. and next Tuesday goes to Northeastern.
