Shutter-bugs are having a field-day on Canadian National's new sceneramic cars, operating through the Canadian Rockies.

With the view afforded from the upper deck of Canada's only full-length glass-topped passenger cars, camera shutters are clicking away.

The majestic and sometimes bewildering scenery of the Canadian Rockies is being served up in mountainous quantities for CN transcontinental train travelers.

Canadian National Railways' crack mainliners, the Panorama and Super Continental both equipped with Sceneramic cars are giving passengers sights they have never been able to see or photograph from a train before.

On its westbound trip, the Panorama is the country's only transcontinental passenger train to make a complete daylight trip through the Rockies.

The schedule of the Panorama, first new cross-country passenger train since 1955, calls for it to pull out of Jasper, Alta., at 6:00 a.m., and from then on the steady 529-mile passage through the mountain valleys begins, ending at Vancouver the same day at 9:30 p.m.

It's generally believed that the Jasper-Vancouver trip is through only one range of mountains, while in fact it is through three: The Rockies, the Selkirk Range and the Coast Range.

On the mainline 17 miles west of Jasper is Yellowhead which, with an altitude of 3,717 feet, is the highest point on the line. Beyond Yellowhead it is a slow descent to the Pacific Coast.

It is just beyond Red Pass Junction, after crossing the Fraser River, that Mount Robson appears. Here the train stops for a few minutes so that passengers may have a leisurely view of the tallest peak in the Canadian Rockies. Towering 12,972 feet, Mount Robson, often called the Monarch of the Canadian Rockies, is the embodiment of all that man's mind thinks a mountain ought to be.

There are some 27 major points of interest on the Panorama's trip from Jasper to Vancouver, each framed by the broad picture window of the train from sunup to sundown. F.N.S.
