YOUR LEGISLATOR'S REPORT

Jack B. Horner
State Representative

To make a flat statement as to how you intend to vote on a particular bill before it comes up for final action can be disastrous. Many changes can be made from the time a bill is introduced until it reaches a vote. What starts out as a bad bill can be amended to such an extent that the objectionable features are written out of it. The reverse can also be true and what starts out as a good bill can be amended beyond recognition.

I receive considerable mail asking how I intend to vote on certain bills. I try to answer these queries as best I can, however a too early statement of intention can come back to haunt a legislator if issued before a bill has solidified for final vote. I can remember a recent one dealing with an emergency appropriation to the University of Pittsburgh. I had made public statements to the effect that I was against the bill, however just before the vote was taken amendments were tacked on which completely changed its effect. I felt I could, with good conscience, vote for this bill in its amended form. However I still voted against it because I had already committed myself before realizing that my objections were to be amended out of it. I might say that the bill as amended did pass despite my negative vote.

Normally one would think that when a bill receives more affirmative than negative votes it has passed, however this isn't always the case. Our Constitution provides that a bill must be approved by the majority of the legislators. We have 209 members of the House, which means that a bill must have 105 'yes' votes in order to pass. Due to sickness, committee meetings, etc., 209 members are rarely present to vote on a measure, but despite how many total votes are cast there must be 105 favorable or it dies.

A case in point is House Bill 676 which would change the formula for distribution of liquid fuel tax to local municipalities. I have written on this bill before so I will not go into it in any detail except to say that generally cities are in favor of the bill and rural areas are against it. We voted on this issue on Tuesday with 103 'yes' votes and 100 'no' votes. Even though 'ayes' outnumbered 'nays' the bill failed for lack of a constitutional majority of 105 favorable votes. When a bill is defeated its sponsors have a right to place it on the Calendar for one more vote at a future time. I understand that the sponsors of this bill intend to take such action and I hope that when it comes up for another vote we can once again defeat it.

COURT CHUCKLES by S. M. REGI

YOU THOROUGHLY SPOILED YOUR WIFE BY PERMITTING HER TO SPEND SO MUCH. IF MY INCOME WERE SMALL, I SHOULDN'T LET MY WIFE BUY A FIFTY DOLLAR HAT.

YOU WOULD IF SHE STARTED TO YELL FOR A GRAND PIANO?
