● Of This 'n That

O little book of poetry came through the mail to us several weeks ago, called "Pennsylvania Profile."

It has special interest to us, in that it was written by Alice Mackenzie Swaim, wife of the Rev. W. T. Swaim, executive director of the Presbyterian Homes of Central Pennsylvania, of which our Schock Presbyterian home here in Mount Joy is a unit.

Mrs. Swaim, who lives in Dillsburg, writes of common things—wild geese over the city, the Pennsylvania hills, an old stone bridge, "one red rose forever," an old mill, cardinals' nest, grey stone churches, etc.

It is almost as if she lived right here in Mount Joy, so familiar do her descriptions of some of these things sound.

For instance, she could have been writing of Donegal church when she said, "I love the grey stone churches of our land, plain, unpretentious, full of dignity, monuments to our ancestors they stand, reminding us of their fight to be free."

Or how many of our beautiful farm homes could she have had in mind when she wrote: "I like an old house with a broad, wide stair, and halfway up, a window with a view, an unexpected alcove for a chair, and on the sill, a fragrant plant or two."

It is a delightful little book, one which we are happy to have on the shelf.

We were four among the nine or ten thousand people who visited the Host Farm motel east of Lancaster Sunday afternoon.

We went down for 'brunch,' immediately after church, and thus were ahead of the crowd which descended upon the new motel for its "open house" beginning at 2 p.m.

We took our own little informal tour of the place, and found it truly fabulous—with its two swimming pools, luxurious guest rooms, game rooms, golf course, bicycle riding paths, and beautiful, beautiful dining rooms.

It seemed to us that what started out to be a tourist "accommodation" will turn out to be a tourist "attraction" instead!
