Shun no toil to make yourself remarkable by some talent or other. Yet do not devote yourself to one branch exclusively. Strive to get clear notions about all. Give up to no science entirely, for science is but one. —Seneca

Over The Back Fence

by Max Smith

IT'S CONFUSING to write about the proper care of Christmas trees because many people have accepted be put in the cooler part of the house and limited lights used on it. After being in the cooler part of the house the tree should be moved to a cooler building such as a garage and kept there for several weeks before setting out in the open; keep the soil around the roots damp at all times.

WHILE I'm on the subject of Christmas trees, I'd like to point out the need of inserting the stump of any cut tree into water or damp soil, sawdust, or sand during the stay indoors. Many average trees will use a quart of water per day when in warm buildings. If this water is not furnished through the trunk, the needles will dry out and become a dangerous fire hazard. When instructing youngsters about living in a room with a Christmas tree, the dangers of open flame from candles or matches should be stressed; the tree should be placed as far as possible from the fire-place and secured so that it will not tip over. Christmas tree safety is very important for a happy holiday season.

WITH THE approaching winter season and the daily possibility of slippery snow and ice, I'd like to suggest the use of sand, salt, or some other abrasive on steps, and walks in order to prevent injury to both man and beast. (Turn to page 5)
