Washington REPORT

One of the great privileges and responsibilities of a Congressman is to select an outstanding group of young men every year as candidates for admission to our nation's military service academies.

My first opportunity to do this will come later this year. I will be choosing nominees for entrance into the Army's Military Academy at West Point and the United States Naval Academy at Annapolis with the classes to begin in July of 1968. The quota system leaves me without any vacancies to fill at the Air Force Academy at that time.

I want to sound the alert right now for all young men who are interested in an academy education and military career. The reason is that Civil Service Commission in July will be conducting, for me, written examinations which help me to evaluate the candidates.

High School students who will be seniors this coming Fall are eligible to enter the competition if they will be at least 17 years of age as of July 1, 1968. Other young men who will still be under age 22 and unmarried on that date are also eligible. Those wishing to compete should write to me before June 1. Applications received after that time will be held for consideration next year.

My intention is to devote considerable time and effort to studying the qualifications of each candidate. The selection of potential academy students not only has a critically personal effect on the future lives of these young men; it also has a vital bearing upon the caliber of leadership in our Armed Forces in the years ahead.

Actually, the July exam will be just one of a number of factors forming the basis
