WASHINGTON REPORT Congressman Edwin D. Eshleman

16th District—Pennsylvania

It was just a few years ago when President Eisenhower signed into law the first Civil Rights Act of the twentieth century. Since that time we have seen advances in housing, jobs, education, voting and public accommodations. Barriers that stood unjustly for more than one hundred years have fallen. Doors have been opened that will never be shut again to a person because of his race, creed or religion. We have witnessed a revolutionary decade that could hold much promise for the future if kept in its proper perspective.

The problem is that certain extremists, who serve interests of no one, have turned a basically just revolution into one of terror and lawlessness. Year by year, these extremists have encouraged violence that has all of the markings of a guerilla war. It has gotten so that we almost expect the terrible drama of arson, looting and sniping to be repeated. Even now the revolutionaries are boasting that their "war plans" for next summer's riots include strikes at public utilities, at urban expressways, and at other nerve centers of our complex society.

This violent challenge to our free society cannot be allowed to continue, for it is in no way consistent with the fundamental beliefs of our people. We welcome dissent, we welcome change, we welcome progress — but we hold firmly that it must be achieved by non-violent means within the context of individual rights. Our system is based on the premise that reason, not force, is our tool of change.

I have little doubt that much of the present trouble arises from a sense of frustration brought on by false promises. We have been laboring under an illusion that the government has unlimited power to remake society. Underprivileged people have been encouraged to believe that injustices would be righted, burdens and obstacles to progress removed — overnight. These are promises that cannot be kept.

We must cease to speak of the new crises with an old vocabulary. The decade past of opening doors should be followed by a decade of preparing people to walk thru those doors. This is the direction in which the Congress should look. Our concern must focus on the lives and welfare of all individuals — their right to liberty, to per-

It doesn't seem possible that it's time for the Ice Capades" again—but they were to open a 12-day engagement at Hershey tonight. When the Ice Capades come, spring can't be far away!

In Southern Indiana, where we grew up, the season for making maple syrup began about Valentine's Day. That always marked the beginning of the end of winter —for the time of taking the sweet "sugar water" from the big maples lasted only a few short weeks and then the sap began to rise to greet the springtime and the "sugar water" was no longer good.

So—Ice Capades — Valentine's Day — and the beginning of "sugar weather" —all are saying that "it can not be long now"
